CHAP. XVII.—My spirit is maimed, broken, and confounded with trouble; and my breath stinks, as in dying persons: the days of my life are thunderstruck, shortened, and debased: nothing but the grave remains for me. 2. O God, do not my friends bitterly mock and deride me as a wicked hypocrite? And does not my mind so dwell and pore on their proud, insolent, and exasperating speeches, that I cannot sleep, nor mine eyes refrain from tears? 3. Come then, give me undoubted assurance that thou wilt take my cause in hand and do me justice; or give me an impartial man like myself, who in thy stead shall debate the matter with me. 4. For, as for these my friends, thou hast withheld from them a common capacity to understand thy providential dispensations, therefore they can never be honoured to judge my plea. 5. He who flatters friends in their wickedness because of their prosperity, or who manifestly makes a prey of them, his posterity shall pine away in disappointment and misery. 6. Alas! both God and my friends now combine to expose me to the common contempt of the people, though lately I was their darling, and the matter of their praise. 7. My eyes are rendered dim, and my mind stupified with grief, and my body is wasted to a skeleton. 8. Upright saints in aftertimes shall be astonished at the sovereign dispensations of God, and the cruel abuse of my friends, with respect to me; and shall be excited to the utmost detestation of hypocrites, who uncharitably censure the afflicted. 9. And, notwithstanding every scandal or discouragement, persons truly righteous shall persevere in their course of piety and virtue, and become more and more confirmed and active in it. 10. And as for you, my friends, either repent of your rash censures, or examine my cause over again; for hitherto none of you have spoken to the point. 11. Whatever hopes you give me of recovering my wonted prosperity, I find I am a dying man, and all my designs, even the most fixed and dear, are at an end. 12. My tormenting pains and anxious thoughts keep me awake through the whole night; or, if I get any moments of ease, it is but little, and soon over. 13. I expect, I wait for, nothing now but an entrance into the state of the dead; and I have prepared for, and expect speedily to lie down in the grave. 14. In the form of my trouble, and in the exercise of my mind, I have contracted a relation to, and familiarity with, death, corruption, and worms. 15. The future prosperity with which you attempt to flatter me, and the temporal happiness you would have me expect, are a mere imagination: 16. These hopes shall quickly appear buried in the grave along with myself.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAP. XVII.—Happy are those who have spiritual breath which cannot corrupt; life that can never fail; who have their portion in eternal blessedness, and are ready for their grave! If cruel friends exasperate my spirit, and drive sleep from mine eyes, let Jesus, as my surety and righteousness, be the ground of all my hope, and the source of all my joys.—God can easily infatuate the wisest when they abuse his gifts. And it is mad to pursue honour and advancements by sinful methods, particularly in employing the wisdom which he has given against his cause and interest. Vain is the inconstant applause of men. While we are great, the world admire us; but when depressed and poor, they contemn or abhor us. But though we see things in Providence which we cannot account for, we must not stagger through unbelief. And if we are faithful to God, we must be zealous for his cause, and take part with his oppressed people, whose bitterest enemies are usually formal hypocrites. They who are once brought into God's new covenant way, Jesus Christ, and a course of holiness, never utterly faint or fail; nay, even difficulties and opposition quicken them. Many great pretenders to wisdom can give no profitable instructions in a day of trial; and empty are the promises, and vain the hopes, of carnal minds. How debasing to proud men are death and the grave! And even good men are apt to despair of that which God really intends for them. Happy are they who rest in Christ here—they shall rest in death, and in heaven for ever and ever!

CHAPTER XVIII.

Bildad reproves Job, and asserts the calamities of the wicked.

A. M. cir. 2184. B. C. cir. 1520.

THEN answered Bildad the Shuhite, and said,

2 How long will it be ere ye [a] make an end of words? mark, and afterwards we will speak.

3 Wherefore are we counted as beasts, and reputed vile in your sight?

4 He teareth himself [†] in his anger: shall the earth be forsaken for thee? and shall the rock be removed out of his place?

5 Yea, the light of the wicked shall be put out, and the spark of his fire shall not shine.

6 The light shall be dark in his tabernacle, and his candle shall be put out with him.

7 The steps of his strength shall be straitened, and his own counsel shall cast him down.

8 For he is cast into a net by his own feet, and he walketh upon a snare. [‡]

9 The gin shall take him by the heel, and the robber [§] shall prevail against him.

10 The snare is laid for him in the ground, and a trap for him in the way.

11 Terrors shall make him afraid on every side, and shall drive him to his feet. [‖]

12 His strength shall be hunger-bitten, and destruction shall be ready at his side.

13 It shall devour the strength of his skin: [*] even the first-born of death [†] shall devour his strength.

14 His confidence shall be rooted out of his tabernacle, and it shall bring him to the king of terrors.

15 It shall dwell [‡] in his tabernacle, because it is none of his: brimstone shall be scattered [§] upon his habitation.

16 His [a] roots shall be dried up beneath, and above shall his branch be cut off.

17 [b] His remembrance shall perish from the earth, and he shall have no name in the street.

18 [c] He shall be driven from light into darkness, and chased out of the world.

19 He [d] shall neither have son nor nephew [*] among his people, nor any remaining in his dwellings.

20 They that come after him shall be [e] astonied at his [†] day, [†] as they that [‡] went before [§] were affrighted.

21 Surely such are the dwellings of the wicked, and this is the place of him that knoweth not God.

[†] Bildad in the first member of the sentence, addresses his friends, describing Job; in the second, he addresses Job: "Shall the earth be forsaken for thee?" shall God leave off the care of all his other works, to attend to thy vain complaints and anticipate the final judgment to gratify your sinful impatience?—Ed.

Is it not the destruction, or desolation (ver. 12) "ready at his side," that is (ver. 13.) twice said to "devour his strength?" The one act points to the same agent. How blessed the hope of that time, when the great devourer shall devour no more; but death shall be swallowed up in victory! 1 Cor. 15. 54.—Ed.

This loose method of speaking, seems, however, rather inconsistent with the unparalleled, and necessary accuracy of Scripture, as a divine revelation. Is not the expression, ten times, literally true? Job now had spoken five times, (ch. 3. 1. & 6. 1. & 9. 1. & 12. 1. & 16. 1.) and his friends five times, (ch. 4. 1. & 8. 1. & 11. 1. & 15. 1. & 18. 1.) in all, ten times.—Ed.

CHAP. XVIII.—In no small heat of spirit, Bildad replied, 2. How long wilt thou cast forth such confused, double-meaning, and unintelligible words, as if you wanted to entrap us? Declare plainly what you intend, and after that we shall deliver our minds with the utmost clearness, freedom, and boldness. 3. For to what purpose is it to talk with one who looks upon us as a company of dull beasts, into whom nothing of wisdom can enter? 4. With impatient rage you tear and torment yourself. Must God, to humour thee, suspend or cease his government of the world, and leave everything to chance; or must he alter his immutable counsels, or the fixed laws of his providence? 5. But, say what thou wilt, though the wicked man may prosper for a while, all his splendour and apparent happiness shall quickly come to an end. 6. The wealth and honour of his family shall be turned into misery, contempt, and sorrow, together with himself. 7. His bold and resolute attempts to increase or maintain his prosperity shall be unsuccessful, and involve him in insurmountable difficulties, and his own devices shall prove the means of his overthrow. 8. His own wiles and works bring him into inextricable difficulty and distress; and every step he takes, in prosecution of his designs, or in the way of pleasing himself, is attended with perpetual danger, and farther ensnares him. 9. While ruinous snares take hold of and entangle him, they, who thirst for his blood, wealth, or honours, shall prevail against him. 10. Even when he neither foresees nor fears it, he is always in danger of some sudden mischief. 11. Unexpected and overturning terrors shall fearfully affright him on all hands, and waste him away on his feet, while they make him to run from place to place for safety. 12. Sorrows shall insatiably, as with intense hunger, feed upon him, till his strength, wealth, and honour be entirely wasted; and nothing but prepared and terrible destruction shall everywhere attend him. 13. Rottenness, fearful affliction, and a miserable death, shall consume his flesh and bones. 14. Whatever he relied upon, for the support of himself and his family, shall utterly fail him, and hasten his unhappy death; while terrors, as a mighty king, shall drive him into the depths of hell. 15. Terrors, despair, and destruction shall dwell in his habitation, which he unjustly acquired; and thunder and lightning, or some exemplary judgment, like that of Sodom, shall destroy it. 16. His whole estate, habitation, and family, shall be irrecoverably ruined. 17. And the very name of him shall be buried in everlasting infamy and forgetfulness. 18. He shall be driven from his prosperity and life into misery and death, and chased out of the world as a nuisance, into eternal fire. 19. None of his descendants or kindred shall long survive him, to keep up his remembrance. 20. They, on every side, who behold, and they who afterward read or hear of the fearful vengeance of God upon him, shall be astonished and terrified at it. 21. This, indeed, is a just description of the miserable condition of the wicked at last; and thus shall those who dishonour God be abased.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAP. XVIII.—There is much wisdom in leaving off contention before it be meddled with; it so furiously heats men's spirits, and makes them to misinterpret every thing said or done by their antagonist; nay, makes them to misapply the most precious or tremendous truths of God! They suspect affronts that were never intended. They even torment themselves—their pride and passion proving hurtful to both soul and body.—But to what terrible judgments of God, in time, in death, and chiefly in eternity, are the wicked exposed! Short-lived and unsubstantial is their prosperity, and heavy the curse that is upon them! Being abandoned of God, Satan first ensnares and afterwards torments them. Agitated by their lusts, they rush headlong into ruin; till death, in all its stings and terrors, devours them! Then friends, physicians, and all human supports, are vain. Their glorious prosperity is quickly turned into everlasting shame and contempt.

CHAP. XIX.—Job replied, Will ye never cease tormenting my soul, and bruising me as in a mortar, with your senseless revilings! 3. Ye have too often wounded me with the vilest reproaches. Ye have been shamelessly obstinate in your rebukes and cruel usage of me. 4. If I indeed had been mistaken in my opinion or practice, I have sufficiently smarted for it in my own person and estate; and so am a fit object of pity rather than of your reproach. 5. If you will still insolently declaim against me, and allege my debasing calamities as a proof of my impiety, 6. Know that I am sensible that it is God, who hath, in this fearful manner, cast me down from my prosperity, and compassed me about with unavoidable miseries. 7. And my case is the more pitiable, that while friends abuse me with reproach, God, to whom I have repeatedly committed my cause, refuses to redress my wrongs, or vindicate my innocency. 8. Nay, his plagues so surround me on every side that I can find no way of escape: and I am so overwhelmed with perplexity that I know not whither to turn myself. 9. He has deprived me of all my dignity, authority, wealth, and family. 10. In respect of children, wealth, honour, authority, and health, he has entirely destroyed me; and all my hopes of future comfort in this world he hath plucked up by the roots. 12. He has in the most violent and furious manner afflicted me, as if I had been one of his principal enemies. 13. Whole armies of troubles have, by his order, invaded me; and, as with raised batteries, so straitly besieged me, that not the smallest comfort I had could escape their fury. 14—16. While friends and neighbours are alienated from me, and refuse to do me any office of kindness, my maidens and men-servants treat me with the utmost disobedience and contempt. 17. My wife regards my complaints and cries no more than if she were a mere stranger, though I have begged her sympathy for the sake of our dear children, who have been so dreadfully hurried into death. 18. The very children, and ignorant people about, following the example of the rest, despise me, and treat me with the most abusive language. 19. The very men whom I had trusted with my secrets, and who had received the most distinguished tokens of my affection, abhor and hate me. 20. I am wasted with afflictions till I am little more than skin and bone; I am bruised till the teeth have fallen out of my head; and I have scarcely left me a mouth to complain. 21. O my friends, have pity upon me, when God's afflicting hand has so grievously smitten and wounded me! 22. Why do ye persecute and harass me, as if ye were an avenging God! Why, as if unsatisfied with my external calamities, do ye cruelly torment my spirit?—23. O that my protestations of uprightness, and appeals to God, were in the most legible and indelible manner registered in a book of public records for my vindication, and for the encouragement of other upright persons under sore troubles! 24. O that they were registered in the most indelible manner in some marble rock or pillar, to continue legible to all generations! 25. For, notwithstanding these present miseries, I by faith know, and am firmly persuaded, that Jesus Christ, my Kinsman-Redeemer, liveth, having life in himself; and shall victoriously stand as the last Adam, upon the dust of the earth, in his incarnation, resurrection, and appearance to judgment. 26. And, though these vermin, bred, or breeding, in my afflicted body, should quickly devour the whole of it, yet even in this body, when fashioned like unto his glorious body, shall I see God in my nature. 27. Whom I shall see for my own particular comfort, in my own person, when raised from the dead—though at present I am at the point of death through sore trouble, and earnestly longing for deliverance.

28. Ye should therefore say, Why do we persecute one in whom there is such soundness and strength of faith, and who hath the right cause in the present debate? 29. Beware lest God punish your inhuman cruelty to me with some terrible judgments. Such rage as yours deserves, and such wrath as God's, provoked by your sin, will bring fearful calamities upon you, that ye may know, to your cost, that God vindicates his own people, and punishes their enemies.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAP. XIX.—Hard is the trial when inward vexation and outward reproach meet together; and distressing the situation, when those, who ought to comfort us, again and again reproach and disquiet us; and especially when men abuse us with revilings, and God shuts out our prayer, and loads us with trouble! But when God strikes a saint, almost every person and thing is ready to second his blow; and then the sparing of his relations becomes a heavier cross than the removal of them by death. It is hard to discern God's love and endeared affection amidst many and heavy strokes of paternal wrath. But happy are those who, when earth is turned into a kind of hell to them, can by faith solace themselves with the views of a future judgment; and of being for ever with Jesus Christ—their Relation, their Husband, their Deliverer, their Lord! It is dangerous to persecute the saints while their Kinsman-Redeemer lives and sees, and shall quickly judge the world. But here let me stand still, and with pleasure remark, that there is a Kinsman-Redeemer provided for fallen men; that he is a living and divine Redeemer; that I have a new covenant interest in him, and know that I have it; that there will be a last day, when time shall be no more; that then my Redeemer, who stood as the last Adam upon earth, shall appear without sin unto my salvation; and so shall I be for ever with the Lord: I shall be like him, for I shall see him as he is!—Let me blush to behold an ancient patriarch, amidst his darkest nights of trouble, with clearer views of Jesus and eternal things, and his happy interest therein, than I, upon whom the light of the glorious gospel hath so clearly shined.

CHAP. XX.—Interrupting Job, Zophar the Naamathite, in no small fury, replied, 2. My thoughts make me burn and swell with matter of refutation, and oblige me to answer; therefore, highly provoked with thy speech, I make haste to the dispute, as a person fully prepared. 3. I have indeed heard a most reproachful answer to my own and my friend's former speeches; but my heart enables me to answer in the most prudent and considerate manner. 4, 5. Knowest thou not, that all along from the creation the prosperity of a wicked man and hypocrite has been very short-lived and momentary. 6. Though his high towering excellency mount up to heaven, and his temporal honours and happiness be advanced to the highest pitch. 7—9. He shall quickly perish in the most disgraceful and contemptible manner, without any hope of recovery. 10. His children, in their wretchedness, shall court the favour of the meanest, or attempt to satisfy them for the wrongs done to them by their father; and the works of his hands shall render him sorrow for his reward. 11. His youthful and secret wickedness shall bring such distempers upon him as shall hasten him to his grave, and shall attend him to hell. 12—14. If he, with great fondness and pleasure, indulged himself in his wickedness, it shall prove most bitter, unwholesome, painful, and destructive to him, in the fearful miseries attending it. 15. The riches which he has greedily and unjustly got into his possession, he shall be forced to restore with great shame and torment. God shall so torment him with trouble and anguish of mind that he shall be sick of them. 16. That which he has been so eager in getting shall bring upon him the most terrible, painful, and destructive judgments. 17. Never shall he enjoy the least real comfort in all his plenty of outward things. 18. He shall be obliged to restore the hire which he unjustly withheld; nay, even what he laboured for shall be cursed to him, and quickly lost along with his unjust gain; and he shall have no comfort in anything he has. 19. Because he furiously oppressed the poor till he rendered them destitute, and violently seized houses which he built not. 20. Therefore shall he have no solid satisfaction in his own mind, but be in pain, as a travailing woman; and shall be deprived of all his desirable things. 21. He shall scarcely have wherewith to sustain himself in life, and shall have no goods left for any to look after. 22. In the very height of his prosperity he shall be terribly distressed; and even his fellows in impiety shall concur to render him miserable. 23. Whenever he shall attempt to satisfy himself in what he has, some extraordinary judgment shall of a sudden overtake him. 24. When he shall attempt to avoid one danger, another more dreadful shall overtake him; 25. And terribly shall the judgments of God torment and destroy him. Horrors of conscience shall seize upon him, as one who cannot live, and who dares not die. 26. Every kind of fearful calamities shall be reserved for him as his treasure, and shall follow him wherever he thinks to hide himself. Some awful judgment, which comes, none knows how, shall consume him. His posterity and family shall, for his sake, be cursed of God, and entirely wasted and ruined. 27. God, by remarkable judgments of thunder, lightning, or the like, shall discover his notorious wickedness; and all creatures on earth shall exert themselves for his ruin. 28. His estate, which he had got by the labour of his family, shall quickly be taken from him, or destroyed, in the day when God manifests his wrath against him. 29. This is the portion and reward which God has allotted to impious and insolent sinners.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAP. XX.—Alas! the most confident, and forward in a dispute are seldom in the right: and with such the kindest warning is interpreted into an affront, and returned with insolence; and the dictates of passion pass for the arguments of reason. The truths of God are often, as here excellently explained, but miserably applied. Short-lived is a wicked man's prosperity, and a hypocrite's profession. If not in this life, sin and ruin shall in the next appear certainly inseparable. And the higher men tower in sinful prosperity, their fall into the pit of destruction shall be the more dreadful. What terrible consequences have the often unthought-of sins of youth! Bitter are the issues of those sins which are reckoned sweet; and inexpressible the loss of those which are reckoned gainful. Where God's curse lies there can be no real felicity. But dreadful shall it be to the wicked when all their dreams of happiness shall be disappointed, their secret sins revealed, and the wrath of God shall take an everlasting hold of them! Let the sound of destruction—terrible destruction—everlasting destruction, that is in my ears, drive me to Jesus Christ, and the everlasting redemption through his blood, even the forgiveness of my sins, according to the riches of his grace.

CHAP. XXI.—Job immediately replied, 2. Instead of pretending to comfort me, patiently and attentively hear my speech. 3. Permit me freely to declare my mind, without interrupting me; and, when I have finished my pertinent reasoning, mock on as long as you please. 4. I have made my appeal to God; and, had it been to man, I could not but be vexed to find myself thus interrupted, reproached, and abused. 5. To see in me a religious and upright man so fearfully afflicted, might overwhelm you with the most confounding astonishment at the awfully sovereign providence of God, and at least make you willing to hold your peace while I speak. 6. For truly, when I think on it, I am filled with the most terrifying awe of his sovereign judgments. 7. But if wicked men always meet with such fearful calamities as you have pretended, whence is it that many of them, for a long time, flourish in uncommon prosperity and power? 8. Nay, live to see their children, and children's children, settled and prosperous? 9. Their habitations and families live in peace and security, and are not loaded with any afflictions; 10. While their cattle are extremely healthful, prosperous, and fruitful, 11, 12. Their wives with the greatest ease bring forth multitudes of children, who employ themselves in nothing but carnal joy and mirth. 13. Even unto old age they spend their days in earthly prosperity and carnal indulgence, and at last die very easily, without any sense of pain. 14, 15. Gratified and puffed up with their prosperity, they, in the most daring manner, testify their dislike and contempt of the knowledge, service, and worship of God. 16. It is God, however, not themselves, who renders them wealthy and powerful. Yet far be it from me to join with them in their impiety; 17. But let facts speak for themselves. How often are wicked men's shining prosperity and honour extinguished by fearful judgments, and justly merited destruction? How often does God, as by lot, distribute to them entangling bonds of trouble and sorrow in his anger? 18. How often are they of a sudden fearfully carried away before the sweeping whirlwinds of his awful judgments? 19. How often are either wicked men's children or themselves rewarded with fearful punishments? 20. How often do wicked men on earth experience the distinguishing judgments and hot burning wrath of the Almighty? 21. And, though their children should prosper, what pain, care, or pleasure, can they have about their house and family when they are cut off by an early death? 22. Dare any of you pretend to teach God how to govern the world, and whom to prosper and whom not? or to prescribe rules by which he must judge men, who, even the highest, are in death but the food of worms? 23, 24. Some men, both good and bad, die in the very prime of their life, and height of their prosperity, and in a very easy manner. 25. Others die amidst torments of body and anguish of mind, without ever partaking of earthly happiness or pleasure: 26. They lie down together in the same condition in the grave, and the vermin make an equal prey of both; so that none can tell who is good or who is bad by any external events. 27. I can indeed easily foresee what you, in your reproachful speeches and imaginations, will think and say. 28. You will ask, What is become of my own once princely family, and of the dwellings of my children? And if Providence hath not plainly marked us out for wicked, by the fearful judgments which have befallen us? 29, 30. But cannot even the most common passenger tell you, that they have observed that wicked men are often preserved, as in a secret place, amidst destructive judgments, and are carried forth with pomp in the day of overflowing wrath, and the punishment of their crimes reserved for the other world? 31. Their power is often so great on earth, that nobody dare reprove or can punish them for their crimes. 32. Nay, they are brought in pomp to the grave, and honourably and quietly rest in their tombs. 33. They sleep as quietly in their graves as the best; and all men, whether good or bad, by little and little, follow them into that state of the dead, without any visible difference betwixt them. 34. Why then attempt ye to comfort me with unsubstantial hopes of future happiness? And why doth the vilest prevarication, inconsistent with the cause of God or your duty, continue to be the whole sum of your discourses?

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAP. XXI.—Those who are once engaged in hot disputes, often lose their way through want of attention to their opponents. But what a mercy it is that saints have a gracious God to complain to when their friends refuse to hear what they say, or to regard their distress! And though the present dispensations of Providence sometimes stagger the faith and hope of the best of men, the last judgment will make all clear and plain. What a certain fact, and often a sad stumbling-block to the godly, is the prosperity of wicked men! It often hardens them in presumptuous impiety, to their own destruction; but it will never reconcile a tender saint to their manner of life. It entails upon themselves and families at last the greatest misery. And, however different their lot on earth, or the manner of their death, or pompous their burial, everlasting punishment in hell shall be their final portion. Let therefore their heart, their

CHAPTER XXII.

(1) Eliphaz asserts that man's goodness is unprofitable to God: 1—4. (2) Accuses Job of divers sins, and exhorts him to repentance: 5—30.

THEN Eliphaz the Temanite answered and said,

2 Can a man be profitable unto God, [*] as he that is wise may be profitable [a] unto himself?

3 Is [b] it any pleasure to the Almighty, that thou art righteous? or is it gain to him, that thou makest thy ways perfect?

4 Will he reprove thee for fear of thee? will he enter with thee into judgment?

5 Is not thy wickedness [c] great? and thine iniquities infinite?

6 For thou hast taken a pledge from thy brother for nought, and [†] stripped the naked of their clothing:[‡]

7 [d] Thou hast not given water to the weary to drink, and thou hast withholden bread from the hungry.[§]

8 But as for [‖] the mighty man, he had the earth; and the [*] honourable man dwelt in it.[†]

9 Thou hast sent widows away empty, and the arms of the fatherless have been broken.

10 Therefore snares are round about thee, and sudden [*] fear troubleth thee;

11 Or [f] darkness, that thou canst not see; and abundance of waters cover thee.

12 [g] Is not God in the height of heaven? and behold [‡] the height of the stars, how high they are!

13 And thou sayest, [§] How doth God know? can he judge through the dark cloud?

14 [h] Thick clouds are a covering to him, that he seeth not; and he walketh [‖] in the circuit of heaven.

15 Hast thou marked the [i] old way which wicked men have trodden?

16 Which were cut down out of time, whose [k] foundation was overflown with a flood;

17 Which said unto God, [l] Depart from us; and what can the Almighty do [*] for them?

18 Yet he filled their houses with good things: but [m] the counsel of the wicked is far from me.[†]

19 [n] The righteous see it,[‡] and are glad; and the innocent laugh them to scorn:

20 Whereas our [§] substance is not cut down, but [‖] the remnant of them the fire consumeth.[*]

21 Acquaint now thyself [†] with him,[‡] and [o] be at peace: thereby good shall come unto thee.

22 [p] Receive, I pray thee, the law from his mouth, and lay up his words in thine heart.

23 [q] If thou return to the Almighty, thou shalt be built up, thou shalt put away iniquity far from thy tabernacles.

24 Then [r] shalt thou lay up gold [§] as dust, and the gold of Ophir as the stones of the brooks.

25 Yea, the Almighty shall be thy [] defence, and thou shalt have [‖] plenty of silver.[]

26 For then shalt thou have thy delight in the Almighty, and shalt lift up thy face unto God.

27 Thou [t] shalt make thy prayer unto him, and he shall hear thee, and thou shalt pay thy vows.

28 Thou shalt also decree a thing, and it shall be established unto thee; and the light shall shine upon thy ways.

counsel, their practice, be far from me. And while I adore the high sovereignty of God in his Providence, let me never comfort myself with vain words! Where there is no truth, there can be no solid comfort.

CHAP. XXII.—Imagining that Job had accused God of injustice, in suffering the wicked to prosper and the righteous to be afflicted, Eliphaz, in great anger, replied, 2. Darest thou imagine that God is a gainer by our virtue, as we ourselves are, and so bound to reward us for it? 3. Can it add anything to his joy or profit that thou art ever so righteous and perfect? 4. Dost thou imagine that he corrects thee out of reverence to thee, or for fear thou shouldest hurt him? Will he, for fear of thee, either punish thee, or give thee an account of his conduct? 5. Are not thy own monstrous and unnumbered iniquities the true cause of thy fearful sufferings? 6. For without any just cause thou hast taken pledges from thy very brethren, and hast, in the cruelest manner, deprived the poor of their small remains of the preservatives of life. 7. Most inhumanly thou hast withheld, from the weary and starving, the most cheap and common supports of their life. 8. But the man who was high born, wealthy, and honoured, was thy favourite, and had thy land and estate at his service, and was sure to carry his cause at thy tribunal. 9. Thou hast spoiled widows of their just property, and cruelly oppressed, broken, and crushed the orphans, depriving them of all their supports and comforts. 10. Therefore entangling troubles and dangers are everywhere round about thee, and sudden fears and terrible judgments affright thee. 11. Fearful troubles and perplexities so overwhelm thee, that thou hast neither a comfortable sense nor hope of relief left; and multitudes of afflictions have with violence burst forth upon thee. 12. Is not God higher in place and dignity than the loftiest stars which thou observest? 13, 14. But, like an Atheist, you seem to think that God cannot know, or doth not care, what is done upon earth, but merely amuses himself in walking round the heavens. 15. Hast thou not eagerly followed, rather than prudently observed, the conduct or fate of those companions of vanity and wickedness who lived before the flood? 16. To whose horrid impieties God put a stop, by destroying them before their time, and carrying them off the earth by an overflowing deluge. 17. Who, in the most insolent manner, wished to have nothing to do with God, and imagined that nothing he could do for them could really profit them? 18. Yet it was he who granted them their whole prosperity. But God forbid that I should ever join in either principles, purposes, or practices, with such abandoned wretches. 19. The righteous shall with pleasure behold the destruction of such men, as a vindication of the honour, holiness, and justice of God; and shall deride their folly in taking such courses as issue therein. 20. While the estates of such as are truly pious and virtuous remain unhurt by the Providence of God, those, who imitate these ancient sinners, are consumed by thunder, lightning, or some other fearful judgment. 21. But since God hath not entirely consumed thee, try, without a moment's delay, to get the spiritual knowledge of God; accustom thyself to him, by repeated supplications; receive peace from him; and quietly submit to him, by an unfeigned repentance. Thus shall all manner of blessings, temporal and eternal, come to thee. 22. Receive, and duly meditate on, the instructive revelations which he may be pleased to afford thee. 23. If by a true faith and sincere repentance thou turn to the Lord, thou shalt be again advanced to thy former honours and prosperity; and the punishment which thy sins have brought upon thee shall be removed far from thee, and whatever belongs to thee. 24. Then shalt thou lay up gold, and fine gold, in such amazing plenty, and with such ease, as if they were the most common things. 25. For the all-sufficient and almighty God shall be thy portion, and the protector of thy treasures; and thou shalt have astonishing heaps of silver. 26. Thou shalt delight thyself in the enjoyment of God's love and favour; and shalt with confidence and comfort present thyself at his throne of grace, and hope for his eternal felicity. 27. With sweet pleasure shall he hear thy prayers; and thou shalt pay thy vows of gratitude to him with the warmest affection. 28. Whatever thou hast purposed shall be accomplished; and divine direction, success, and comfort, shall attend all thy proceedings. 29. When wicked men around thee are distressed or destroyed, thou shalt confidently expect honour and felicity; and God shall bring to eminent and extensive happiness the person who is cast down in his own eyes. 30. Nay, at thy request he shall marvellously deliver, not only many innocents, but even the guilty, and their country, by means of thy prayers, piety, and virtue.

Reflections upon Chap. XXII.—Nothing can be more absurd than to imagine that we can make God our debtor by anything which we can do. We have nothing good in us, or done by us, but what is God's gift. None are too great for God to humble. And if he spare the wicked, it is not for fear of them, but in patient pity towards them. Even good men, from a pretended regard to God, are apt to charge their neighbour with things which he heartily abhors. But if God's greatness, omniscience, and equity, should deter men from crimes, they should also deter us from unjustly charging our neighbour with them. He that condemns the righteous is an abomination to the Lord. How tremendous are the judgments of heaven, and happy they who can safely rejoice amidst them; or who, in a Christian manner, take warning from them! Through ignorance of, and enmity against God; through neglect and contempt of his word; and through obstinate continuance in sin; men lose the greatest blessings, and incur the greatest evils. But O the delight in God, the bold confidence towards him, the intimate fellowship with him, the satisfaction even in managing outward affairs, the safety in times of common calamity, and usefulness towards others,—that knowledge of, and peace with God, spiritual improvement of God's word, and sincere repentance, do produce!

Chap. XXIII.—Job replied, 2. Notwithstanding all your pretended advices and comforts, I have as much reason for bitter complaints as ever; and my sufferings far exceed my expressions of grief. 3. O that I were admitted into God's own immediate presence, and allowed to present myself before his judgment-seat! 4. I would, in an orderly manner, set the justice of my cause before him, and fully support it with arguments, vindicating myself, and confuting your reproachful allegations. 5. I would insist for his decision whether I be a hypocrite or not; and that he would show me plainly why he hath so afflicted me. 6. Would he employ his infinite power and majesty to bear me down? No; but would mercifully strengthen and encourage me to plead with him. And, suppose he should plead against me in the multitude of his strength, he certainly would lay no false charge against me, nor make any hostile attack upon me. 7. For at his throne of grace a righteous person, such as I am, may argue the matter with him; and by this means I should fully and for ever escape condemnation, being acquitted by him as my Judge. 8, 9. I have tried all methods to obtain a fair hearing for my cause before him, but have not hitherto been able to procure it. 10. But he knows the integrity of my heart and life; and whenever I am tried at his bar, I shall come off sufficiently vindicated; and it is to render me more holy and pure that he tries me in this furnace of affliction. 11. I have always, in the most fixed and steady manner, followed his pattern and guidance. I have stedfastly observed his commandments, without ever swerving from them. 12. I have never apostatized from his doctrines nor precepts; and have more earnestly sought, more highly prized, more heartily delighted in, and more carefully stored up, his words of revelation, than my necessary food, or most valuable and precious things. 13. But his purposes are unchangeable, and he immovably persists in afflicting me, and does whatever he pleases, without giving to any a reason for his conduct. 14. Whatever trouble he has intended for me he will inflict; and in his purposes and providential conduct there are many instances of high sovereignty, of which, though both wise and just, we cannot see the reason. 15. In consideration of his infinite majesty, and sovereign and irresistible power, I am troubled at the tokens of his anger; and, when I leisurely consider his hard dealings with me, I am afraid of him. 16. For, in his infinite power, he hath quite broken and melted my heart with fiery tribulations; and I am in perpetual terror of his inflicting still heavier strokes. 17. For he keeps me still alive under these terrible troubles and perplexities, and refuses me the favour of dying by his fearful and confounding strokes.

Reflections upon Chap. XXIII.—Our groanings should never be heavier than our strokes. God allows us to complain of our troubles, but never to murmur at them. It is becoming for saints to be earnestly desirous of close dealing with God; and to be particular and importunate in their requests at his throne of grace. However men abuse us, God will not only deal in equity, but even in great mercy, with his people. And it is proper always to keep up kind and exalted thoughts of him. They who fly to him in distress shall find their spiritual strength increased by every application; and, if he acquit us, we need neither fear nor care who condemn us. But O what dark and perplexing nights of desertion and perplexity are God's choicest saints often afflicted with! Happy are those who, amidst all, cleave to his commandments, walk uprightly in his way, and feed daily by faith on his word! Their trials shall issue to their lasting honour and advantage. But it is sad when the immutability of God's counsels, and the exact execution of them, the irresistibleness of his power, and ordinary methods of Providence, disquiet instead of composing our minds. Let him do what he will, he cannot but do right. However terrible he is in himself, in Christ he is infinitely engaging. Let us therefore always acquiesce in his works, and delight in himself. There is no reason rashly to wish for death, when God can so quickly render life a comfort to us, and a service to his church.

Chap. XXIV.—But if God always punishes the wicked in this world, as you pretend, why are not particular seasons of it fixed by him? And why do not those who are best acquainted with him observe those days of vengeance on his enemies? 2. Certain it is, that in this world some are notoriously covetous and unjust, and even open robbers. 3. They cruelly oppress widows and fatherless children. 4. They harass, terrify, or even imprison the meek, poor, and afflicted. 5. In the most unconcerned manner they carry on their oppressions; and, by rapine and violence, maintain themselves and families in the desert. 6. They reap fields, and gather vintages not their own. 7, 8. They force from the poor

5 Behold, as [*] wild asses in the desert, go they forth [†] to their work, rising [f] betimes for a prey; the wilderness yieldeth food for them and for their children.

6 They reap every one his [‡] corn in the field; [§] and [l] they gather the vintage of the wicked:

whatever they have, till they reduce them to absolute misery, in a state similar to that of wild beasts. 9—11. While they inhumanly deprive infants of their provision, that the enslaved mothers may work, and deprive their poor underlings of the meanest necessaries of life, they force them to labour in the hardest services. 12. Those, whom they have oppressed, wounded, or unjustly condemned, mightily cry to God for vengeance against them; yet he punishes them not, even in the slightest manner. 13. They sin impudently in the face of the sun, and against the light of nature, conscience, and revelation: they do not approve, delight in, or observe God's laws; and, if at any time they stumble on a good action, they quickly give it over, however easy and reasonable. 14—17. Hating the light, robbers and unclean persons, in defiance of an all-seeing God, earnestly carry on their murder and whoredom in the night-season. 18. Lighter than froth, they rush on every opportunity of uncleanness or bloodshed; their inheritance is spent in the most accursed manner; and they quite disregard the management of the vineyards, or other most profitable business. 19. After all, the grave, in a quick and easy manner, consumes these notorious sinners. 20. Their very mothers easily forget their death, it is apparently so pleasant. Rottenness shall be sweet to them. They do not become infamous in the world; but their crimes are quickly and altogether forgotten. 21, 22. They abuse barren women, injure widows, and with great activity, craft, and cruelty, oppress every body around. 23. And, though men give them presents, that they may have their protection and friendship, they still watch for opportunities to injure these dependants. 24. After being exalted a while, they come to their graves, as seasonably, in appearance, and as easily, as their neighbours. 25. But, if you will insist that the wicked are always fearfully punished in this life, I dare challenge the whole world to find me the person who can disprove the facts which I have now stated.

N. B. Ver. 18—20, 23, 24. may be interpreted as a representation of the miserable state of wicked men after all their prosperity.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAP. XXIV.—God fixes his time and manner of punishing sinners as he pleases: and none can know either love or hatred by all that is before him in his outward lot. While the saints and poor, who are the special charge of God, are remarkably afflicted, the most daring sinners are often remarkably prosperous in this world. But the Lord has not forsaken the earth: he takes notice of every injury done to his children. And, however long his patience may bear with the presumptuous insult of sinners to his character and government, he will resent their wickedness at last. Even when they are most secure they are least safe. Though their success promise them impunity a while, and though their crimes should be concealed on earth, they will be openly discovered at last, and punished for ever. Amidst the perpetration of crimes, terror often seizes them; but how much more in sharing the certain, the fearful, the eternal punishment of them!

CHAP. XXV.—Bildad replied, 2. To God belongs that supreme authority over all things in heaven and earth, and that infinite majesty which strikes every beholder into solemn awe. In perfect quietness and order he rules all the luminaries in the firmament, and all the angels and glorified saints above. Why then darest thou pretend to find fault with him? 3. His creatures are absolutely innumerable to us, and every one shares of his light, his benefits of nature or grace;—why then contend with him? 4. And how then can a poor wretched man stand as righteous before God? And he that is born of a sinful woman be pure before him? 5. In his view the bright luminaries of heaven are spotted and dark. 6. How mean and vile then must the frail and dying children of a corrupted progenitor and covenant-head be in his sight!

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAP. XXV.—After long and hot disputing, people often come to see that there was less difference between them than they thought. Job's friends were obliged to acknowledge that wicked persons might prosper for a time, and Job owned that they would be destroyed at last. It were a great mercy, for religious disputants, to have their hearts always filled with awful thoughts of God and humble thoughts of themselves. But how infinite is the condescension of God to hold fellowship with men, so mean, so loathsome! Let me never forget how JEHOVAH assumed my nature, and in it, for me, became a worm and no man; a reproach of men, and despised of the people! What manner of love hath the Father bestowed on us in thus sending forth his own Son in the likeness of sinful flesh, that we, sinful worms, might, through his blood, become the sons of God!

CHAP. XXVI.—To this Job, in a derisive manner, answered, 2, 3. To what purpose serve these hints, either to support the cause of the Almighty, or to direct him in his government of the world, or to comfort a dispirited, and instruct an ignorant soul? Who can be a whit bettered by aught you have so confidently uttered, that is quite foreign to the point in hand? 4. Do you imagine that I need to be instructed in these points? or that you, as one inspired of God, can by such hints revive and refresh my spirit? 5. I myself can discourse to far better purpose concerning God. While terrible monsters, minerals, pearl, coral, and the like, are formed in the bottom of the sea, or heart of the earth, and fishes and animals on the surface of it, the departed ghosts tremble, and travail in pain, in the deep and dark regions of misery. 6. The whole state of the dead, whether of soul or body, is perfectly obvious to God's all-seeing eye; and all the depths and miseries of hell are perpetually visible to him. 7. He spreads the heavens over the apparently empty regions of air; and so balances the earth by his power, that it hangs like a ball in the air, supported by nothing. 8. He binds up large collections of water in the clouds (by which he covers his glory, and on which he rides in majesty) as in firm bags, till he please to make them distil in dew, rain, snow, or hail. 9. He conceals his own glorious abodes; he firmly fixes the visible heavens, and spreads his veiling collection of clouds over them, to conceal his glory and restrain the scorching beams of the sun. 10. Everywhere, while the revolutions of day and night continue, he has fixed the shores and boundaries of the sea, that, rage as it will, it cannot exceed them. 11. The lofty mountains, which seem the supporting pillars of heaven, tremble and shake when he corrects men by earthquakes, thunders, or tempests. 12. By his power he tosses the sea into a terrible fury, and as it were divides it into ridges and mountainous billows; and, by his wise government, he again calms it at pleasure, and mortally wounds the crocodiles, and other proud monsters which inhabit it. 13. By the influence of his Holy Spirit he at first adorned the heavens by his power; he formed the milky way, and all their winding constellations. By his wind he clears up the sky; and his almighty power strikes prostrate the most direful and destructive monsters of sea or land. 14. Nay, behold, these are but the outlines, and a very small parcel of his works. It is but very little that we either hear or know concerning him; but the thunder-like declarations of his prevailing, his infinite excellency, who can comprehend?

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAP. XXVI.—Sometimes self-conceited persons may be ridiculed out of their notions when reasoning is not effectual: and in disputes much is ordinarily said that is not to the present purpose; and not the edification of their neighbour, but victory over him, is the great aim of the disputants. Little is it remembered, that not the displays of God's highness, but of his grace in Christ, can give ease to a wounded spirit. But it is happy when disputes end in men's glorifying God with one mind and one mouth. The perfections of the Deity are plainly marked in all his works of nature and grace; and all things must be well done where God himself is the sole or principal agent. Let me therefore in all behold his hand, his face. If he conceal the glories of his throne from this lower world, let me walk by faith, not by sight. If he has garnished the heavens, let me set my affections on things above, and not on things of the earth. If his perfections are unsearchable, let me always admire and adore him.

CHAP. XXVII.—None offering to speak, Job continued his substantial, but dark and mysterious, discourse, saying, 2. I protest by the Almighty God, who refuses me an opportunity of clearing myself before him, and who has tormented me with all these fearful strokes of his vengeance, 3, 4. That, while I live, I will never utter an untruth, either to vindicate myself where I am guilty, or to condemn myself where I am innocent. 5, 6. God forbid that ever I should justify your opinions and censures, deny my own sincerity, and confess myself to be a hypocrite! 7. It is mine enemies and opposers whom God will condemn and punish as wicked. And indeed I could wish nothing worse to my greatest enemy and injurer than to be wicked.—So much I detest it. 8. For what avails the firmest hopes of a hypocrite in all his covetously-gained prosperity, or even inward tranquillity of soul, when he comes to die? 9. Will God always hear his prayers in the time of trouble and death? 10. Or will he find comfort in God when the world affords none? or will he in prosperity, as well as in adversity, continue in the earnest worship and service of God? 11. Attend therefore, while, by God's assistance, I candidly inform you of some of the mysteries of his almighty providence. 12. Certain it is, that every one of you knows, from experience, the truth of what I am to say. Why then should you thus absurdly attempt to prove the contrary? 13. Far be it from me to imagine that God loves hypocrites and oppressors. No; though, for a time they prosper, the Almighty has reserved treasures of vengeance for them and their posterity as the just reward of their wickedness. 14. Their numerous and once-flourishing families are condemned to destruction by the sword of justice or war, or to be starved by famine. 15. Such as escape the sword and famine shall be cut off by the noisome pestilence. And, none adventuring to bury them, they shall lie unburied, or be interred in an ignominious manner; and their widows shall either want affection, or not be in life, to bewail their unhappy end. 16, 17. Though these wicked men should treasure up ever so much wealth or costly apparel, they shall have only the labour of procuring it; for God shall destroy them, and bestow their wealth upon such as will do more good with it. 18. They may build their houses as strong as they please, and settle their estates in the surest forms; but God will quickly shake them out of all, or render them useless to them. 19. In the twinkling of an eye death shall overtake these rich sinners, and carry them off, as wretchedly poor, into the eternal state; and even perhaps without an honourable burial or monument on earth. 20. Manifold terrors seize upon them; and some surprising calamity often hurries them unexpectedly into the other world, where the terrors of God shall overwhelm them, as the waters did the old world; and in that eternal night shall the sweeping tempest of infinite wrath unexpectedly seize on and ruin them. 21. Some violent and pestilential affliction, some raging and burning storm of God's just vengeance, hurls them out of their wonted felicity, residence, and life, and deprives them of all the good which they expected. 22, 23. While God pursues them with manifold forms of unmixed and unavoidable vengeance, men, who are thereby delivered from their oppressions, shall deride them, rejoice at their fall, and detest their memory.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAP. XXVII.—Appeals to God ought to be necessary, deliberate, serious, and in matters of importance. Prevarication or concealment is as much perjury before God as direct falsehood asserted. But how often our high praises of God are mingled with something unkindly and disparaging! Not our most solemn vows, but Jesus' blood and Spirit, must chiefly maintain our purity of conscience and integrity of life. And, while he enables us to exercise a conscience void of offence towards God and men, we ought never to believe either devils or men suggesting that we are hypocrites. But it is best to refute the calumnies cast upon us by living well. Miserable indeed are hypocrites, whose hopes will never be crowned with enjoyment, their prayers never accepted nor graciously answered, and whose religion is neither comfortable nor constant! And yet, alas! how many such, amidst a glare of profession, continue with hearts unrenewed! Miserable is the condition of the wicked, even at its best, in this life: and what then must it be in hell? When once dead, their riches strangely vanish, and even fall into the hands of the godly, whom they hated: nor is any habitation secure and lasting but that which is not made with hands, eternal in the heavens. And in the most alarming forms of death God often ushers wicked men into eternal fire.

CHAP. XXVIII.—No wonder that I cannot tell you the reasons why God punishes some wicked men in this world and not all, when, after all our researches, we have so scanty a knowledge of natural things.—There are secret mines for the silver, and a country for gold, which men melt and refine. 2. And iron is, with art and labour, dragged from the dust, and stones are melted into brass; 3. The miners, in the most earnest and daring manner, dig till they have quite lost the light of day, and bring their ore from the dark caverns of the earth, where pestilential damps and other dangers often prove mortal. 4. While, with infinite labour, they drain off the springs that disturb them, they break into veins of metal about the bottom of mountains; and, unheeded by the men who walk above them, they wander in the dark bowels of the earth. 5, 6. While the surface of the ground produces herbs and corn for food to animals; lime, brimstone, and such other combustibles, are found in its bowels; nay, the most precious stones and gold in some parts of it. 7, 8. So mysterious are the passages of these miners, that the most quicksighted fowls never looked into them, and the most fierce and courageous animals never dared to enter them. 9. But the miners artfully cut their way through rocks of flint, and dig to the bottoms of mountains, to come at the precious metals. 10. They make passages for draining off the water that breaks in upon them, and cleave asunder the veins of ore, and earnestly discover the precious stones and metals. 11. They stop the springs from overflowing their mine, turning them another way, and bring up these precious gems or metals, which had been long sealed up in the heart of the earth.—12. But to find out solid wisdom, or obtain the knowledge of God's reasons in his providential conduct, is still more difficult. 13. God hath so disposed it, that no man knows the order, method, or importance of his procedure; and no man on earth can attain to it. 14. No search into the depths of the earth or sea can procure it. 15—19. Not all the precious metals or gems in the world can purchase it. 20, 21. No, not the most quicksighted creatures on earth can point out a method to obtain it. 22. The solid consideration of death and hell are a proper introduction to true wisdom; and yet in death and damnation there are manifold instances of God's wise procedure, which are not sufficiently comprehended in the reasons of them. 23—27. God alone; who is infinite in wisdom and knowledge, and who orders and disposes all things at his pleasure; who manages winds, waters, rains, and thunders, in all their circumstances, degree, time, place, or form; properly understands the reasons of whatever he does, particularly his dealings with men. 28. But what he inculcates and bestows upon men, as their proper wisdom, is such a knowledge and filial awe of his unbounded excellencies, as makes them to flee to him as their only refuge and portion; and, hating every thing sinful, to love him, and keep his commandments.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAP. XXVIII.—Alas! how men rack their wits, and toil their members, to obtain riches, which, while enjoyed, are unsubstantial, and which quickly take to themselves wings and fly away, as an eagle towards heaven! Why are we not more industrious in digging for Jesus' hidden treasures, which answer all things, and endure for ever! Surely Jesus and his mysteries, Jesus and his grace, must be strangely mistaken when men can thus prefer created trifles and rarities of dust! But how great is that God, whose eye overlooks all, whose power effects all, whose purpose fixes all things! Let me never dare to pry into his private counsels, whereby he regulates his conduct. Let me leave the secrets of other men's hearts, and the deep mysteries of Providence, to the Lord. And let me and my children study what he has revealed to us as the standard of our faith and practice. Let us learn the wisdom which comes from above, which is pure and peaceable, manifested in fearing the Lord, and departing from evil.

CHAP. XXIX.—After another pause, Job proceeded in his spirited vindication of himself, saying, 2. Oh that God would re-establish me in my former prosperity of person, family, and estate, as in the days wherein he watched over and protected me! 3. When his blessing and favour directed and prospered me in all my affairs, and made me to pass untouched through all the troubles and inconveniencies of life, and the various dangers, difficulties, and calamities which befell others around me. 4. When I was in the days of my ripe prosperity, and had the authority, the oracles, and secrets of God with me: 5. When God Almighty continued so kind to, and familiar with me, and my children and servants were round about me; 6. When whithersoever I turned myself, I abounded in all sorts of the choicest blessings; 7. When I took my seat in the places of judicature and concourse, 8. The young men stood in the most profound awe of me, and the aged stood up in reverence, and ceased to speak. 9, 10. Nay, from a regard to my superior authority, princes, the most noble not excepted, refrained from speaking. 11. They who heard me judge in a cause pronounced me highly favoured of God, and richly endowed with his gifts and grace, and prayed for his distinguished blessings upon me: and they who observed my just procedure attested my pious, just, and blameless conversation; 12. Because I never failed to redress the grievances of poor, fatherless, and destitute persons, who complained to me. 13. Many blessed me, as the instrument of delivering them when they were upon the point of being ruined by false accusations; and I caused the widow's heart to sing with joy for her great and unexpected deliverances, and the favours which I granted her. 14. In all my sentences I fixed my attention on what was just and upright: and the decisions I gave were an honour to me. 15. I instructed, directed, and assisted such as could not manage their own affairs; and was ever ready to help and comfort such as could not help themselves. 16. I was a kind teacher, provider, and protector to the poor; and carefully inquired into their circumstances, as well as into their difficult and obscure pleas. 17. By proper punishments and restraints I rendered the wicked incapable of oppressing, and forced them to restore that which they had violently extorted. 18. Then I vainly imagined that, after a long life of amazing prosperity, I should die quietly in my own house, among my children and friends; 19. That my remarkable happiness should certainly continue, as I had every mean of preserving and securing it; 20. That the honour and respect which I had from others, and my abilities and powers, should still continue with me; 21, 22. That men should still regard my advices and decisions with the profoundest respect; 23. That they should always be exceedingly desirous to hear my opinion and judgment on a point; 24. That, though I carried myself familiarly towards them, they should still stand in awe, and carefully avoid every thing which might deprive them of my favour; 25. And that I should still be regarded as their principal director in their conduct, and affectionate comforter under their troubles.

Job's honour and prosperity changed into contempt and distress.

2 Yea, whereto might the strength of their hands profit me, in whom old age was perished?[†]

16 And now my [§] soul is poured out upon me; [§] the days of affliction have taken hold upon me.

17 My [h] bones are pierced in me in the night-season: and my sinews take no rest.[‖]

18 [i] By the great force of my disease is my garment changed: it bindeth me about as the collar of my coat.[*]

19 He hath cast me into the mire, and I am become like [k] dust and ashes.

20 I cry unto thee, and thou dost not hear me; I stand up, and thou regardest me not.

21 Thou art [l] become cruel to me: with [†] thy strong hand thou opposest thyself against me.

22 Thou liftest me up to the wind; [‡] thou causest me to ride upon it, and dissolvest my [§] substance.

23 For I know that thou wilt bring me to death, and to the house appointed for all living.

24 Howbeit he will not stretch out his hand to the [m] grave, [‖] though they cry in his destruction.[*]

Reflections upon Chap. XXIX.—What holiness, comfort, and honour, God bestows upon his favourites when it is for his glory and their good! But those who prosper in youth know little what dark and cloudy days may be in reserve for them. It is pleasant, however, to commemorate our early intimacies with God, and his kind protection of us, or communications of light, life, and comfort to our heart: and if they be lost, God allows us to pray for the restoration of our mercies, spiritual and temporal. Faith in God, and intimate fellowship with him, remarkably contribute to render men truly honourable and useful in this world. And it is comely in a state when judges are grave, solemn, and impartial helpers to the poor, and terrors to the oppressors; and when people are modest, submissive, and grateful: but when men have great wealth at home, and are regarded as the oracle, the darling sovereign, and comforter of their country, how apt are they to suppose their felicity secured, and to forget the evil day!

Chap. XXX.—But now, alas! the youths, who durst scarcely look me in the face, mock and deride me, even those whose infamous parents I would have disdained to have employed in attending my dogs, or in other of the vilest services; 2. Being indeed so lazy, listless, and weak, that it was in vain to employ them in anything, after they had lived so long abandoning themselves to wickedness; 3—8. Base and beggarly fellows, who, ashamed of their poverty, and to prevent the punishment of their wickedness, had fled into deserts; and there, like wild beasts, lived upon roots and herbs, and lodged in dens, caves, and bushes. 9. But now they triumph over me, and make my calamities the subject of their songs and merry conversation. 10. Heartily abhorring me, they disdain to come near me, unless it be contemptuously to spit in my face. 11. Because God has deprived me of my authority, wealth, and honour, and has grievously afflicted me, they take an unrestrained liberty in their insolent behaviour towards me. 12. The very boys place themselves as my accusers; they insolently abuse me; and attempt, by different methods, to destroy me. 13. They endeavour to obstruct all means of comfort and relief to me. They so disturb my mind, that I know not what to do. Without having or needing any assistance, they, in the most presumptuous manner, increase my calamities. 14. With the most furious and destructive violence they assault me; and, when God has deprived me of my substance, family, and health, they insult me in the most noisy forms. 15. Terrors, directed by God against me, seize upon me in the most violent and irresistible manner; and my abundant prosperity is quickly, in a moment, over and gone. 16. By reason of my terrible afflictions my courage and resolution are quite exhausted, and the powers of my soul so wasted, that I can do nothing but melt into tears, and faint away with grief. 17. In the night, when others rest, my bones are, as it were, pierced and bruised with pain; and the worms, terrors, and agonies that torment me, never take rest. 18. By their fearful force, my boils, which cover me all over, are like an outer garment to me, and gird me round about; and their filthy matter stains my clothes, and glues them fast to my skin, that I can scarcely get them changed. 19. I am fearfully plunged into filthy troubles. My foul sores render me like dust and ashes, and reduce me to the point of death. 20. When I present myself before thee, O God, and continue instant in the most fervent supplications, thou dost but contemn me. 21, 22. Acting as an implacable enemy to me, thou exercisest thy almighty power to destroy me. Thou liftest me up to the wind of thy vengeance, and makest me to ride upon it as stubble driven to and fro. My body is consumed by the violence of my trouble; and my firmest things are made to reel as the waters of the sea tossed with a storm. 23. Truly, by thy thus dealing with me, I see that I need look for nothing but death and the grave, that common sanctuary of mankind. 24. And I hope God will neither exert his almighty power to rescue me from the grave, nor let me in my passage cry out of pains, let friends entreat for my life as they will; nor use it to molest me there, but give me refreshing ease in the state of the dead. 25. Did not I always sympathize with others in their distress and poverty? And do not I now weep, as one condemned to a period of trouble? Does not my soul, as a poor distressed object, pine away with grief? 26. For when I firmly expected great and lasting prosperity, terrible miseries came upon me. 27. How insupportable are the inward torments of my body, and the anguish of my soul! Days of fearful affliction have rushed upon me before I was aware. 28. I spend my days without any comfort; and sadness makes me quite unconcerned about light, or any other agreeable object. My trouble forces me to cry out, be as many around me as will. 29. I can do nothing but seek to be alone, and hiss and howl over my dreadful case. 30. The hot moisture of my boils has rendered my skin black, and has inflamed all my bones. 31. All my joy and mirth are laid aside; and nothing but weeping and wailing are come in their stead.

5 [e] If I have walked with vanity, or if my foot hath hasted to deceit;

6 [f] Let me be weighed in an even balance, that God may know mine integrity.

7 [g] If my step hath turned out of the way, and mine heart walked after mine eyes,† and if any blot hath cleaved to mine hands;

8 Then [h] let me sow, and let another eat; yea, let my offspring be rooted out.

9 If [i] mine heart have been deceived by a woman,‡ or if I have laid wait at my neighbour's door;

10 Then let my wife [k] grind unto another,§ and let others bow down upon her.

11 For this is an [l] heinous crime; yea, it is an iniquity to be punished by the judges.

12 For it is a [m] fire that consumeth to destruction, and would root out all mine increase.

13 If I did despise the cause of my manservant or of my maid-servant, when they contended with me;

14 What then shall I do when [n] God riseth up?‖ and when he visiteth, what shall I answer him?

15 [p] Did not he that made me in the womb make him? and * did not one fashion us in the womb?

16 If I have [q] withheld the poor from their desire, or have caused the eyes of the widow to fail;

17 Or have [r] eaten my morsel myself alone,† and the fatherless hath not eaten thereof;

18 (For from my youth [s] he was brought up with me, as with a father, and I have guided ‡ her from my mother's womb;§)

19 If I have [t] seen any perish for want of clothing, or any poor without covering;

20 If [u] his loins have not blessed me, and if he were not warmed with the fleece of my sheep;

21 If I have [x] lifted up my hand against the fatherless, when I saw my help in the gate:

22 Then [y] let mine arm fall from my shoulder-blade, and mine arm be broken from ‖ the bone.

23 For [z] destruction from God was a terror to me, and by reason of his highness I could not endure.

24 If I [a] have made gold my hope, or have said to the fine gold, Thou art my confidence;

25 If I [b] rejoiced because my wealth was great, and because mine hand had * gotten much;

26 If [c] I beheld † the sun when it shined, or the moon walking ‡ in brightness;§

27 And my heart hath been secretly enticed, or ‖ my mouth hath [d] kissed my hand:*

28 This also were [e] an iniquity to be punished by the judge: for I should have [f] denied the God that is above.

29 If I [g] rejoiced at the destruction of him that hated me, or lifted up myself when evil found him;

30 (Neither have I suffered † my mouth to sin, by wishing [h] a curse to his soul;)

31 [i] If the men of my tabernacle said not,‡ Oh that we had of his flesh! we cannot be satisfied:

32 The stranger did not lodge in the street; but I opened my doors § to the traveller;

33 If I covered my transgressions [k] as Adam, by hiding [l] mine iniquity in my bosom:

34 Did [m] I fear a great multitude, or did the contempt of families terrify me, that I kept silence, and went not out of the door?‖

Reflections upon Chap. XXX.—Unsubstantial, uncertain, and transient are all things but God and the spiritual blessings of his new covenant. But sin, even on earth, makes many the most base and miserable of wretches; the youngest in age, the meanest in extraction, the poorest in property, and the most scandalous in character, are generally the most ready to contemn, insult, and abuse the greatest and best, when Providence once frowns upon them. And it is hard for wounded spirits to bear up under complicated troubles, terrors of mind, loathsome and painful diseases of body, and frowns of God. But happy are they who can by faith take up the eternal enjoyment of God as a full balance to all the troubles which they can suffer on earth! Happy are they who have the testimony of a good conscience, that in simplicity and godly sincerity they have had their conversation in this world!

Chap. XXXI.—Ver. 6. Let me be tried by an upright impartial judge, that God may acknowledge and approve mine integrity. 7, 8. If I have knowingly, willingly, and ordinarily wandered out of the way of my duty, have indulged my heart in covetousness or lust, or my hands in bribery and injustice, let all that I have be bestowed on others, and my children, plants, and trees be rooted up. 9, 10. If I have been enticed to unclean lust by any woman, or if I have watched for opportunities to defile my neighbour's bed, let my own wife be a slave and a whore to others. 26, 27. If I have beheld the sun or moon with any idolatrous regard, or have had any inward inclination to esteem them as deities, or have given them any external worship. 34. Did ever fear of men terrify me from candid confession of my sin, or from any other duty; or if I have concealed my faults, let me be overwhelmed with the terror and contempt of men till I be ashamed to be seen. 35—37. O that I had but an impartial judge, and that my accuser would give me a written charge! I should prize it as an honour, since every article would then be proved false: I would, with undaunted courage and confidence of success, give a candid account of my past conduct, to see of what he would accuse me.

Reflections upon Chap. XXXI.—How diversified are the forms in which inward corruption breaks forth among mankind! And there is great need of purifying the heart, of solemn dedication to God, of watchfulness over both soul and senses, and of constant, awful, and engaging impressions of God, to promote a holy and circumspect life. It is highly honourable to be followers of those ancient patriarchs, who through faith and patience inherited the promises. But, alas, that many things, by them held horrid and detestable, are now become common and fashionable!—What dangerous enemies to our souls are fleshly lusts! and they call for especial watchfulness. If we would keep our heart pure, our eye must be single. However unexceptionable our outward conduct appear, there is a God who marks our secret sins; and no impurity of temper can consist with the enjoyment of him. Such as will lodge sin in their heart now must lodge in hell for ever. How rare truly honest men are in this world! None are more to be suspected of fraud than such as are full of talk in their worldly dealings. Honesty needs no varnish. The gains of covetousness, however secret, leave a blot in the sight of God, which nothing but Jesus' atoning blood can wash away. The fruits of injustice must either be restored, or they will damn us: and they who are conscious of integrity never shun a trial. What a crying sin is adultery; and how damning!—Great humanity and tenderness is due to servants and the poor, who have the same Maker and God as ourselves: and there is great need of grace to wean our heart from this world, and from every rival of God. It is a hard task to forgive injuries without reluctance. But to rejoice in the fall of an enemy is malicious and murderous. The greatest provocation will never justify our revenge. Hypocritically to hide our sins is destructive to our souls. And it is very dangerous to be partakers with other men in their sins. Let us therefore avoid the fear of man, which causeth a snare. Let us never hear a good cause run down without vindicating it, nor see injustice committed without remonstrating against it. In all our conduct let us study to approve ourselves unto God.

Chap. XXXII.—Ver. 1. He was resolutely bent to justify himself, let them say what they would. 2. He insisted too much upon his own vindication. Yea, not without reflecting upon the severity of God. 7, 8. Old men ought to instruct their inferiors in age in the matters of God. But I find that, whatever advantage old age may give for knowledge and experience, it is chiefly men's own rational soul, and the inspiring Spirit of God, which qualify them to apprehend the mysteries of religion and Providence. 13. Lest you should think you have said all that needs to be said in the cause, and that God's immediate strokes upon Job are an evidence that he is a hypocrite.—14. Job hath given me no provocation to speak; nor will I use such weak reasoning, and provoking language, as you have done.—21. Do not expect that I should flatter you in your errors and mistakes out of respect to your age, gravity, or the like; for I am resolved to deal freely, plainly, and impartially with you.

Reflections upon Chap. XXXII.—In angry disputes there is ordinarily much to reprove on both sides. But when the disputants are warm, they are loath to own that they have lost the cause. Yet it is much better to say nothing than to talk error and nonsense. When we have fault to find, it should be done before men, not behind their backs. A gracious heart is jealous for the honour of God, and cannot, unmoved, see him slighted. And it is highly commendable to show a holy indignation against sin, and warmth in the cause of truth. In disputes, it is proper that each should speak in his own order, and that each be animated by a true and discreet zeal for God. And it is extremely agreeable when great sense and courage are directed by great humility and modesty. In matters of doubtful disputation we ought to be diffident of our own judgment, and to be more swift to hear than to speak. Yet, after we have given others a long and patient hearing, it is but reasonable that we should be heard in our turn. And by-standers, who hear without prejudice, often see further into a dispute than those who have their minds blinded by passion. God deals very sovereignly in the disposal of knowledge, or other gifts. Men may have rational souls, and yet know little: but they ought to cultivate this distinguished privilege. All the wisdom of fallen men in spiritual matters is but darkness, till the Spirit of God enlighten their mind.—

17 That he may [h] withdraw man [*] from his [†] purpose, and hide pride from man.

18 He keepeth back his soul from the pit, and his life [‡] from perishing by the sword.

19 He is chastened also with pain upon his bed, and the multitude of his bones with strong pain.

20 So that his life abhorreth bread, and his soul [§] dainty meat.

21 His [‖] flesh is consumed away, that it cannot be seen; and his bones that were not seen stick out.

22 Yea, his soul draweth near unto the grave, and his life to the destroyers.

23 If there be a [k] messenger with him, an interpreter, one among a thousand, to show unto man his uprightness;[‖]

24 Then he is gracious unto him, and saith, Deliver him from going down to the pit; I have found [*] a ransom.[†]

25 His flesh shall be fresher [‡] than a child's; he shall return to the days of his youth:

26 He shall pray unto God, and he will be favourable unto him; and he shall see his face with joy: for he will render unto man his righteousness.[§]

27 [‖] He looketh upon men; and if any say, I have sinned, and perverted that which was right, and it profited me not,

28 [*] He will deliver his soul from going into the pit, and his life [†] shall see the light.

29 Lo, all these things worketh God [‖] oftentimes with man,

30 To bring back his soul from the pit, to be enlightened with the light of the living.

31 [m] Mark well, O Job; hearken unto me: hold thy peace, and I will speak.

32 If thou hast any thing to say, [n] answer me: speak; for I desire to justify thee.[‡]

33 If not, hearken unto me: hold thy peace, and I shall teach thee wisdom.[§]

And, alas, how often disputes are closed before the question be rightly stated or impartially handled! And hence the issue is so seldom a seeing eye to eye in the truth. They have therefore good right to speak who can set the cause of truth in a more convincing and striking light than had been formerly done. And they who speak for God, ought to be earnest in their discourses, inflamed with zeal for his glory and the good of souls; and to be so impressed with his perfections and laws, as to regard neither the fear nor the favour of men.

CHAP. XXXIII.—Ver. 3. I shall not speak from passion or prejudice, as others have done before me, but from a sincere desire of doing thee good, and in such a clear manner, that thou mayest be fully convinced of the truth of what I say. 4—6. I am a man like thyself, fit to reason with thee on equal terms, and inclined to plead the cause of God against thee. 7. There is nothing about me to terrify or torment thee. 8—11. Nor do I intend to charge thee with hypocrisy, but with uttering of self-justifying language, dishonourable to God, as if he had dealt more severely than was just with thee. 12, 13. Let thy former life be as holy and unblameable as it will, yet thou art certainly culpable in quarrelling with the dispensations of God, who is infinitely superior to thee in every respect, and accountable to none for his conduct. 14—18. Nay, so dull are men, that, when God takes repeated pains in dreams, visions, or the like, to instruct them effectually for their humiliation and eternal salvation, they do not take notice of, or do not understand, his meaning. 19—22. Hence, for their awakening to a proper attention, he severely afflicts them, till they are brought to the very point of death. 23, 24. If then, by the instruction of some faithful minister, and especially by the instruction of Jesus Christ, the unparalleled Angel and Interpreter of the new covenant, the afflicted man be brought, not only to discern the equity of God in afflicting him, but to discern, and by faith apply, Jesus' imputed righteousness to himself, God intimates to his soul a full and free redemption through that all-covering atonement. 25, 26. In consequence hereof, not only the man's body and mind recover their wonted health and alacrity, but he is enabled, with boldness and success, to pour forth his requests before God, who allows him the comfortable sense and gracious reward of that righteousness imputed to, or implanted in him. 27, 28. While God exactly observes, the man, all influenced by cordial gratitude, shall publicly confess his sinfulness of heart and life, and that the due reward of his deeds has never been rendered unto him; and shall profess his full assurance of faith, that God has redeemed him by the mighty price of his Son's blood, and will bestow his fulness of grace and glory upon him.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAP. XXXIII.—We ought seriously to hear out a discourse before we form a judgment on it. And they who speak for God, ought to speak with great deliberation and plainness. Those who are in great trouble ought to be tenderly, as well as convincingly, dealt with. And yet a faithful testimony must be borne against the dishonours which we see or hear done to God by even the greatest of saints. In the rage of temptation or dispute, or in the depth of trouble, they often speak things very unadvisedly; and yet their words are apt to be taken in a worse sense than they meant them. To make us conceive aright of God's providence, we must carefully keep in view his infinite greatness, sovereignty, grace, and wisdom. And there is great need to keep our heart with all diligence, that even in our dreams we may enjoy profitable fellowship with, and instruction from, God, which may humble our pride, and secure the salvation of our soul. For God, at his pleasure, makes the most fearful changes upon the bodies or minds of men. But honourable to God, and profitable to men, are sanctified troubles. They lead to Jesus and his word, as our instructors; to Jesus and his blood, as our atonement and ransom; to Jesus and his law, as our way in which we must walk; in our grateful returns for his mercies. They render our sins bitter and heavy, and our deliverances admired, and instigate

FURTHERMORE, Elihu answered and said,

2 Hear my words, O [a] ye wise men; and give ear unto me, ye that have knowledge;

3 [b] For the ear trieth words, as the [*] mouth tasteth meat.

4 Let us [c] choose to us judgment: let us know among ourselves what is good.

5 For Job hath said, [d] I am righteous: and God hath taken away my judgment.

6 Should I lie against my right? [e] my wound is incurable without transgression.[†]

7 What man is like Job, who drinketh up scorning like water?[‡]

8 Which [f] goeth in company with the workers of iniquity,[§] and walketh with wicked men.

9 For he hath said, It profiteth a man nothing that he should delight himself with God.

10 Therefore hearken unto me, ye [g] men of understanding: Far be it from God, that he should do wickedness; and from the Almighty, that he should commit iniquity.

11 For the work of a man shall he render unto him, and cause every man to find according to his ways.

12 Yea, [h] surely God will not do wickedly, neither will the Almighty pervert judgment.

13 Who hath given him a charge over the earth? or who hath disposed [‖] the whole world?

14 [i] If he set his heart [*] upon [†] man, if he gather unto himself his spirit and his breath;

15 All flesh shall perish together, and man shall turn again unto dust.

16 If now thou hast understanding, hear this; hearken to the voice of my words:

17 Shall [k] even he that hateth [‡] right [§] govern? and wilt thou condemn him that is most just?

18 [l] Is it fit to say to a king, Thou art wicked? and to princes, Ye are ungodly?

19 How much less to him that [m] accepteth not the persons of princes, nor regardeth the rich more than the poor? for they all are [n] the work of his hands.

20 [o] In a moment shall they die, and the people shall be troubled at midnight, and pass away: and [*] the mighty shall be taken away [p] without hand.[†]

21 [q] For his eyes are upon the ways of man, and he seeth all his goings.

22 There is [r] no darkness, nor shadow of death, where the workers of iniquity may hide themselves.

23 For [s] he will not lay upon man more than right, that he should enter into judgment with God.[‡]

24 He shall [t] break in pieces mighty men without [§] number, and set others in their stead.

25 Therefore [‖] he [u] knoweth their works, and he overturneth them in the night, so that they are [*] destroyed.

26 He striketh them as wicked men [x] in the open sight of others;

27 Because they [y] turned back [†] from him, and would not [z] consider any of his ways:

28 So [a] that they cause the cry of the poor to come unto him, and he heareth the cry of the afflicted.[‡]

29 [b] When he giveth quietness, who then can make trouble? and when he hideth his face,[§] who then can behold him? whether it be done against a nation, or against a man only:

30 [c] That the hypocrite [‖] reign not, lest the people be ensnared.

31 Surely [d] it is meet to be said unto God, I have borne chastisement, I will not offend any more:

32 [*] That which I see not teach thou me: if I have done iniquity, I will do no more.

33 [*] Should it be according to thy mind?[†] he will recompense it, whether thou refuse, or whether thou choose; and not I:[‡] therefore speak what thou knowest.[§] us to invite others to a share of his goodness. And often God brings men through great tribulation to their comforts on earth, as well as to their glories in heaven. Departures from God issue in ruin, unless he recover us by grace. And so manifold are his admonitions, that, if we perish, our ruin lies at our own door.—The wiser men are, they are the more humble and willing to learn; and the more desirous to be undeceived if they have been mistaken.

CHAP. XXXIV.—Ver. 2. I appeal to you, O men of sense, and I beseech you seriously to consider what I say. 3. For the mind can judge of the truth or falsehood of doctrines, as well as the mouth can judge of the taste of food. 4. Let us, without any passion or prejudice, thoroughly examine this cause: 5, 6. For Job has uttered some very dangerous expressions in his own justification, as if he could not vindicate himself without accusing God of unjust severity towards him. 7, 8. Did ever a good man deride, not only his friends, but even his God, with such greediness and delight? Did ever a good man under trouble speak and act so like the wicked? 10—12. It is impossible that God can deny justice to any, or punish without cause, or forbear to reward men according to their deeds, either in this life, or in that which is to come. 13—17. Without supposing him perfectly just, he could never govern the world; and men are so far from being able to give him his charge or directions, that their existence and life depend wholly upon his mere good pleasure and bounty. 18, 19. If it be improper rudely to charge earthly princes with wickedness and impiety, how daring is it to accuse him, who formed all mankind equally subject to his power and pleasure, and therefore regards the greatest no more than the least, and can never do any thing unjust to gain their favour, or to avoid their anger. 20. At his pleasure whole nations, in their midnight security, are in a terrible manner, by earthquakes or the like, hurried into eternity; and the mightiest princes or warriors are, by his immediate influence, displaced from their station, or deprived of their life. 21. His omniscient eye discerns enough in men for which he may justly punish them. 25. He takes a full and exact account of their works; and, because they are wicked, he rolls a night of destructive vengeance upon them; and they are bruised, as in a mortar, under the weight of it. 26. He suddenly, and with shame, hisses away these eminent ones in the open view of unnumbered spectators. 27. Because of their manifest apostasy from, and obstinate rebellion against him: 28. That he may encourage mean persons to apply to him for relief; and may graciously hear the plaintive cries of the poor and afflicted. 29. And, if he give deliverance, rest, and comfort, none can make trouble. If he withhold his favourable smiles, none can procure help from him. 30. He also punishes wicked men, that their insolence may be controlled, and that their subjects may not be encouraged to imitate their impieties, or be perpetually held in the fetters of tyranny and oppression. 31, 32. Instead of quarrelling with God's afflictive providences, we should kindly submit to them, and with holy resolution to avoid it, beseech him to discover to us the sinful cause of them, however secret. 33. Has not God inflicted these troubles upon thee, as a part of thy due reward, because thou hast grievously murmured against him? Since thou hast chosen what I never would, declare plainly thy reason for it.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAP. XXXIV.—Mutual assistance is necessary in searching out truth, or convincing the mistaken. But often good men, in the heat of their spirit, speak worse than they mean; and reproach both themselves and their God, in speaking or acting like the profane world. Just views of God's perfections are requisite to prevent our sinful freedoms with him, or to render us penitent for them. The eye of God constantly observes our hearts and ways. How foolish is it then to hide our sin! Rejection of his warnings, and obstinate disregard of his will, fill up men's iniquity. And they who will not be guided by his word shall be smitten with his rod of judgment: and quickly will he resent the groans of the poor and oppressed, and redress their grievances. What God gives to nations or persons none but himself can take from them. If a soul enjoy a sense of his favour, through faith in Jesus, no accusations of sin, nor fears of death or hell, can any longer disturb him. And when God is our enemy, the whole world cannot protect us. Let wicked men crouch as they will, and profess as they will, in order to obtain power, he can easily disappoint them in mercy to mankind. The more persons are humbled for sin, the less they will complain of their sufferings; but, conscious of the depth of iniquity in their heart, and the spread of it in their life, will search out the cause, and turn from it to God. Humble confessions of our ignorance and crimes, earnest supplications for necessary instructions and supplies of grace, and holy resolutions to walk in his way, are necessary in all our dealings with God. To struggle with him, who best knows how to manage us, and does all things well, is at once extremely foolish and criminal. But, alas, how often the best of men, when left to their own passions, under heavy troubles, practically take part with God's enemies, insult his friends, and obstinately murmur against himself! And it is then a distinguished kindness faithfully to reprove them, and to help them to see and be affected with their offence.

CHAP. XXXV.—Ver. 9—13. Many, under terrible troubles and inhuman oppressions, cry to God for relief, and for vengeance on their oppressors: but as their prayers are mingled with no faith in God, or kind sense of his goodness, but merely forced from them by the pressure of their distress, and the haughty violence of their oppressors, God pays no regard to them. 14, 15. Therefore, although thou complainest that he hath not, and despairest that he will ever appear for thy relief, yet he still attends to wisdom and equity in every dispensation; therefore do thou patiently wait and earnestly look for him; and remember that it is because there is nothing of this in thy carriage that God has thus severely afflicted thee; and because of thy excessive pride he quite disregards thy former prosperity, and overlooks thy present extremity of trouble. 16. And it is owing to thy ignorance, or thoughtlessness of this, that so many foolish and wicked words have proceeded out of thy mouth.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAP. XXXV.—There is great need to be well-rooted in the knowledge and faith of God's infinite greatness and sovereignty, in order to prevent many fatal mistakes in principle or practice. We can never make him our debtor. The best we do is unworthy of his notice; and the worst he dispenses to us is less than our iniquities deserve. Whatever trouble now attends his service, it will appear infinitely profitable at last. But many groan under their troubles, who never show any humiliation for sin or desire after God. Yet irreligious poverty and suffering is, of all human miseries on earth, one of the most deplorable. It cannot be expected that such men's selfish prayers, without any regard to God or the good of their soul, should issue in help from him. While they are insensible of the most distinguishing mercies they enjoy, they cannot reasonably expect deliverance from the evils they feel, or the experience of those divine joys which overbalance every sorrow and pain. While our unhumbled hearts only murmur and groan under our troubles, it is a mercy to be denied the removal of them. But when God corrects his saints severely for their humiliation, Satan is ever ready to drive them to despair. The greatness of their sufferings makes them to overlook their unbelief, impatience, and rashness; by which means they lose the comforts, and defer the removal of them. It is only strong faith in God that can guide us aright through temptations and trouble. Despair of relief is as high a reflection upon his power and grace as impatience is on his goodness and wisdom. And, if our troubles are not removed, but increased, it becomes us to look well if we have not provoked God by our insolent behaviour under them.

CHAP. XXXVI.—Ver. 2. Patiently permit me to inform thee a little further, for I have yet something more to speak on God's behalf. 3. While I treat of distant matters, and fetch my arguments from the inspiration of God's Spirit, or from his wonderful works, I will maintain the justice of God in all his proceedings, and give him the glory thereof. 4. And assure thyself I will not attempt to baffle thee with sophistical arguments; but, as I have thoroughly studied the point, I will make use of no reasoning but what is sincere and solid. 5. Behold, such is the infinite power and wisdom of God, that he never despises any, however mean! 6. He will bestow no solid happiness upon wicked men, but will do justice to the humble, poor, and afflicted. 7. He never ceases his special care of the righteous; but sometimes advances them, however poor, to the highest stations; and continues, establishes, and exalts them therein. 8—10. Or if they be brought into, and fixed in, sore troubles, he by that means makes them to consider their ways, discern their sinfulness, and turn from it to himself. 11. If their afflictions effect their reformation to piety and virtue, great and manifold shall be the blessings and comforts bestowed upon them here and hereafter. 12. But if, notwithstanding their troubles, they continue obstinate in wickedness, they shall be cut off by some fearful calamity, and shall perish in their ignorance, folly, and sin. 13, 14. Thus hypocrites heap up treasures of wrath for themselves; they neglect to implore God's help and deliverance in their troubles; therefore their life is early cut off, in a fearful storm of his wrath, by some exemplary judgment in death; and through eternity he reckons them with, and punishes them as, the cursed and abominable. 15. But he delivers the poor and humble in their affliction, and teaches them to know and practise their duty under it. 16. And hadst thou behaved thyself aright under thy pressures, he would even now have delivered thee from thy pressing and tormenting troubles into a state of freedom and affluence, in which there should be nothing to straiten thee; and that which fell from heaven upon thy table should be full of fatness. 17. But thou hast earnestly pleaded the cause of the wicked, and justified their reproachful murmurings against the providence of God: therefore his just indignation has already seized thee, and holds thee fast in bonds of fearful affliction. 18, 19. Since he is manifesting his hot displeasure against thee, take heed lest he cut thee off without remedy; and then no ransom, however great, can redeem thy life again; nor will all the united power and virtue in the world be able to deliver thee, if God resolve to destroy thee. 20. Never wish for a period of awful judgments, in which multitudes of men are often destroyed amidst all their comforts and enjoyments. 21. Never give way to sinning, particularly to rash and intemperate speeches concerning God's providential procedure. Thus shalt thou be chosen in, and plucked out of, the furnace of affliction. But, alas! hitherto thou hast preferred rash censuring of God's ways, to a patient bearing of thy afflictions. 22. It is God alone who can effectually deliver and exalt men; and none can cast down, scourge, instruct, or govern, like him. Pretend not therefore to direct him. 23. None hath directed him how to govern the world, or can call him to account for his management. None can charge him with anything unjust or imprudent. Never therefore rashly complain of him. 24. Instead of censuring, always admire and speak honourably of his works of creation and providence, which men cheerfully behold, and should cordially celebrate. 25. There are scarcely any so ignorant but they must observe these, and acknowledge his greatness and excellency in them. 26. Behold, such is the unbounded perfection of God, that we can never comprehend it; and such his eternal duration, that we cannot search it out. How unfit are we then to judge of and censure his conduct? 27, 28. It is he who exhales from the sea, and forms the drops of rain which fall from the clouds. 29. How incomprehensible are his spreadings of the thick clouds all along the face of the heavens, and the crashing thunder of his cloudy residence! 30. How marvellously he extends the flashing lightning all over the sky, makes it penetrate to the bottom of, or vails it with, the rainy waters exhaled from the sea! 31. By such rains, thunder, and lightning, he punishes wicked men for their sins; and, by rendering the earth fruitful, makes liberal and magnificent provision for his creatures. 32. By his hollow clouds he conceals the thundering flash as well as the bright and scorching sun; and restrains it by their interposing influence. 33. Its crashing noise informs concerning it: as a red flaming treasure of wrath, it hangs over the proud; or the noise of the clouds, as well as the motions of animals, portends the approach of the rain formed of vapours exhaled from the sea by the sun.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAP. XXXVI.—Plain and important speeches for God deserve the most fixed attention. Faithful souls are always zealous to vindicate God's dispensations from men's foolish and sinful aspersions; and truth and simplicity of speech always become such as profess themselves teachers of God's good ways. It is proper that we should always retain exalted thoughts of God: that he thinks none below his notice, however mean; countenances none of the wicked, however great; is always ready to redress the injured; takes a peculiar pleasure to protect those that are good; and brings special ruin on hypocrites, as the treacherous enemies of his government. If God exalt me to honour, let me exert myself for the welfare of mankind, and prepare for giving my account to him. If he afflict me, let me thankfully believe it done to discover my past sins, and to dispose me to receive his sanctifying instructions; fully persuaded that deliverance and comfort shall appear whenever his merciful end is gained. If my deliverance be delayed, my continued sin is the cause. But if I am not bettered by his rod, let me fear, lest my stupidity and dissimulation should issue in the suffering of his everlasting vengeance. In affliction let me never be secure, or make light of his stroke. Let me never hope to find out ways of my own to withstand or avoid it. Let me never dare to persevere in self-vindication or quarrelling with God;—never dare to prescribe to him, who is an absolute sovereign, an incomparable teacher, and unexceptionably just in all his procedure; and with whom neither riches can bribe, nor darkness conceal. In the glory of his works let me discern the perfections of his nature. If he makes the clouds fountains to the lower world, and vails to the upper, let me view every thing formed in them, rain, hail, snow, or thunder, as his workmanship. And, while I am here, let me live by faith, not by sight. Whom, having not seen, let me love; and in whom, though now I see him not, let me rejoice with joy unspeakable and full of glory.

CHAP. XXXVII.—Just now my heart trembles, and is like to start out of its place, at the thought or hearing of the terrible thunder. 2. Hear attentively the roaring noise of JEHOVAH'S voice, and the breathing murmur that proceeds from his lips. 3. By his providence he guides the forcible and straight darting of the thunderbolts along the whole extent of the sky, and makes the blaze of lightning to fly over the confines of the earth. 4. After the blazing flash of lightning the noise roars. He thunders with the voice of his majesty: nor will he restrain the storm and rain when the roaring of his thunder is heard. 5. By thundering the mighty God produces many marvellous effects: he does many things in nature which we cannot comprehend. 6. At his command the snow falls, as also the gentle showers and the deluging rains, the impetuous showers and tempestuous storms. By the winter storm he restrains men from labour, and keeps them within doors, that they may have opportunity to consider his works. 8. The very wild beasts are obliged to shut up themselves in their thickets and dens. 9. The whirlwind is generated in the moist clouds of the south as in a chamber; and cold proceeds from the scattering north wind. 10. By God's will and appointment the frost is produced, and the rivers are congealed that they cannot flow. 11. As by pouring pown continual showers he wearieth the thick cloud, so his clear brightness dispels it; and by his light he disperses the transparent duskiness of the sky. 12. While the clouds are carried hither and thither at his pleasure, he himself, on every side, holds the reins of their motions, that he may accomplish his own purposes by them all over the world; 13. Whether it be for punishing the guilty by pestilential vapours and storms, or for rendering the earth fruitful, or for graciously rewarding his people with remarkable plenty. 14. Stop therefore thy censures of, and murmurings at, the dispensations of God's providence; seriously consider his wondrous works; and think how little thou understandest of the most obvious of them. 15. Knowest thou how God lays his orders, or impresses his powerful influence, upon them? or how he makes the rainbow-light of the transparent cloud to shine? 16. Canst thou tell how, in his marvellous wisdom, he hangs the clouds in the air, as if balanced by one another? 17. Dost thou know how thy garments wax warm when the earth is calmed by the southern sun and the pleasant gale? 18. Hast thou assisted him in clearing the sky after rain; and in making it to stand fast by its own strength, as a mirror, in which we may behold his admirable wisdom, power, goodness, and glory? 19. Teach us, if thou canst, how to speak to, or of God: for, by reason of his incomprehensible excellencies, and our great ignorance, we cannot speak of him to any purpose. 20. Nothing which I have said is worthy of his notice, or answerable to the subject. If any attempt to describe his excellencies, he will be quite confounded by their dazzling glory. 21. And just now men cannot look upon the bright shining of the sun in the sky, when the wind has dispelled every cloud. 22. The godlike glancing sun shines clearly by the purifying north winds: and upon God is a robe of terrible majesty. 23. We cannot comprehend his essence, perfections, purposes, or works. His power indeed is infinite: but he will not afflict his people in strict judgment or severity of justice. 24. Men should therefore stand in awe of him, and beware of quarrelling with his conduct; for he regards none who are wise in their own conceit, or who dare to contend with their Maker, or presume to censure his proceedings.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAP. XXXVII.—O how much of God is to be seen in the works of nature, in the forms of clouds, and in the changes and forms of weather! If all creatures thus fulfil his pleasure, why should men be rebels, and refuse his direction and government! Why do we not improve his corrections and mercies! It is absurd for us to quarrel with him, when we understand so little of his nature, or even of his most obvious works. And it is highly necessary to maintain the most awful, kind, and honourable thoughts of him, and the most cordial submission to every thing which he does. But by what terrible harbingers doth he sometimes introduce himself to his people? If clouds thicken, if thunders roar, if lightnings flash, if rains descend, and winds blow, let me hope that my God is near, my God that saveth me!

CHAP. XXXVIII.—Ushered in by a terrible whirlwind, to make Job more humble and attentive, God himself next addressed him, saying, 2. Who art thou that hast sought to eclipse, misrepresent, and censure, the wisdom and justice of my providence, by discourses proceeding from ignorance, mistake, inconsiderateness, and passion? 3. Now, according to thy proud challenges, prepare thyself to debate the cause with me; nay, to answer me a few plain questions; that, convinced by these of the weakness of thy understanding, thou mayest perceive [§] Kimah denotes whatever is lovely or delightful; and hence it is, by universal consent, applied to that constellation, the heliacal rising of which in the days of Job, announced the spring. The Pleiades, now so called, are a cluster of stars in the constellation Taurus. Of this constellation Fayette, the northernmost, was in the colure of the vernal equinox 2136 years before Christ; which would date the time of Job much earlier than has been indicated in former notes. Dr Hales, by a similar calculation, drawn from Aldebaran, fixes it 2337 years before the Christian era. The error of these calculations lies in assuming the period when this constellation became the leader of the spring; whereas the Pleiades, in the same latitude, might serve for centuries to be the most remarkable constellation of the spring. See this point still farther established in Landseer's Sabean Researches, p. 115.—Ed.

[‖] Kesil, in Arabic, signifies cold, inactivity, torpor; and seems justly applied by Aben Ezra to the star Antares in the heart of the constellation Scorpio; and it is opposed to Pleiades by nearly half the heavens, and would consequently denote the benumbing influences of winter.—Ed.

how incapable thou art of judging as to my secret counsels or mysterious providences. 4—7. If thou art so skilful as thou pretendest, tell me how I laid the foundations of the earth: how I planned and adjusted the whole form and boundaries of it: how, without any foundation to stand on, I settled it upon its own centre, and firmly connected all the parts of it, while angels, whom I had previously created to be my honorary guard, celebrated the wisdom, goodness, and power, which I therein manifested! 8—11. Tell me how, with banks, or even sand, I set bounds to the newly formed ocean, which often rages as if it would cover the earth, from which its waters were separated; how I covered it with thick mists and fogs, restraining its fury; how I made hollow places in the earth for it; and, notwithstanding its furious raging, confined it in them! 12. Hast thou, before or since thy birth, governed the morning light, making it to observe its punctual time, and orderly to appear in its ever-varying place; 13. That it might suddenly spread itself over the whole hemisphere, that wicked men who rage in the night, being detected, might by condign punishment be restrained or cut off; 14. That the earth, as the wax beneath the seal, may put on a new form, and the things on it appear as its adorning garment; 15. And that by this light the wicked may be deprived of that success and comfort which they promised themselves in their crimes, and their tyrannical power may be repressed? 16. Hast thou ever personally surveyed the springs and rough places in the bottom of the ocean, or walked, as in state, through the inmost corners of the deep, to know and direct every thing there? 17. Art thou fully acquainted with all the dark caverns and inmost parts of the earth: or with the whole nature and circumstances of death, and the grave, and of the eternal state? 18. Are the dimensions of the earth, with its whole substance and product, perfectly known to thee? 19—21. Dost thou, by thy great experience and long observation, fully understand the orderly returns of light and darkness, day and night? or canst thou direct their motions in a proper manner? 22, 23. Art thou fully acquainted with the collections of snow and hail in the clouds? and canst thou, like me, regularly bring them forth in the winter season, or in the seasons of wrathful calamities? 24. How is the light of the sun, moon, or stars, so equally and so widely diffused? How is the way prepared for the overflowing rains, or for the lightning and thunder? and how are their motions so regularly directed? 26, 27. Is it by thy direction that the rain waters those places of the earth where no one lives to do it, or which, without seasonable rains, could produce nothing? 28—30. Canst thou form drops of rain or dew; or produce ice or hoar frost; or tell how they are formed; and how the surface of the waters is congealed into a kind of stone? 31. Canst thou alter the seasons of the year, by restraining the influences of the heat and summer-boding stars? or free the earth from the tempestuous influence of the winter and sloth-boding stars? 32. Canst thou make to appear, and lead round, the luminaries of the middle region of heaven in their season? Canst thou direct the round whirling pole stars, and their attendants? 33. Knowest thou all the order and laws of the heavenly bodies? Couldest thou settle the whole government of them, and their influence upon the earth? 34, 35. Canst thou, just now, by a call bring down an abundant rain on the place where thou art; or make the thunder to dart forth its flames over thine head; or do whatever thou pleasest? 36. Canst thou direct the random darting of thunder and lightning to strike as regularly as if it had solid wisdom and distinct perception? or didst thou give thyself rational understanding? Canst thou tell how a single thought is formed? 37, 38. Canst thou number and govern all the clouds of heaven; or restrain the rain when the earth is sufficiently watered? 39—41. Canst thou provide food even for the most ravenous creatures, particularly for the lioness and her whelps, or for old lions incapable of leaving their dens; or for the young ravens, when by their dams they are expelled from the nest?

* The reem. The animal commonly called unicorn has no existence except in heraldry, though Barrow (see his Travels in Africa, p. 294.) describes such a creature, but does not affirm having seen it. A few consider the reem to be of the deer species; but the common opinion turns to the rhinoceros, which well accords with the description, and is also a literal unicorn. See Campbell's Travels in S. Africa, vol. 2. p. 294. Robinson (see Biblical Researches, vol. 3. p. 300.) thinks it is the buffalo, but this animal does not seem to correspond with the powerful creature described in the text. While the mighty elephant is perfectly tamed, the rhinoceros is considered utterly irreclaimable. (See ver. 12.)—Ed.

† Rather—"The wings of the ostrich vibrate, but are they as the pinions of the stork and the falcon?" The wings of the ostrich never lift her from the earth, yet God compensates this defect by swiftness, so that she is as safe as the soaring falcon. God has deprived her of parental instincts, yet her young are protected by providence, as well as the young of the stork, the example and the emblem of maternal tenderness.—Ed.

‡ Her labour is in vain, if the wild beast break her eggs; yet, void of understanding, she is also void of maternal "solicitude."—Ed.

§ The ostrich generally remains couchant, but when "she lifts herself up" to her full height, and runs at her utmost speed, she can easily distance the fleetest horse; and is taken or killed simply because she runs in a circle, so that her path may be crossed by the hunter and his associates.—Ed.

‖ "Canst thou make him skip like the grashopper," with equal or almost imperceptible swiftness? Any one who has tried to lay hold of the grashopper for inspection, will fully comprehend the expressive aptness of the similitude.—Ed.

• The nets or hawk species are numerous; and some are well known to be migratory, stretching their wings to the south at the approach of winter; and by a wonderful instinct, following a perpetual summer.—Ed.

12 Wilt thou believe him, that he will bring home thy seed, and gather it into thy barn?

13 Gavest thou the goodly wings unto the peacocks? or wings and feathers unto the ostrich?

14 Which leaveth her eggs in the earth, and warmeth them in the dust,

15 And forgetteth that the foot may crush them, or that the wild beast may break them.

16 She is hardened against her young ones, as though they were not her's: her labour is in vain without fear;

17 Because God hath deprived her of wisdom, neither hath he imparted to her understanding.

18 What time she lifteth up herself on high, she scorneth the horse and his rider.

19 Hast thou given the horse strength? hast thou clothed his neck with thunder?

20 Canst thou make him afraid as a grasshopper? the glory of his nostrils is terrible.

21 He paweth in the valley, and rejoiceth in his strength: he goeth on to meet the armed men.

22 He mocketh at fear, and is not affrighted; neither turneth he back from the sword.

23 The quiver rattleth against him, the glittering spear and the shield.

24 He swalloweth the ground with fierceness and rage: neither believeth he that it is the sound of the trumpet.

25 He saith among the trumpets, Ha, ha! and he smelleth the battle afar off, the thunder of the captains, and the shouting.

26 Doth the hawk fly by thy wisdom, and stretch her wings toward the south?

27 Doth the eagle mount up at thy command, and make her nest on high?

28 She dwelleth and abideth on the rock, upon the crag of the rock, and the strong place.

29 From thence she seeketh the prey, and her eyes behold afar off.

30 Her young ones also suck up blood: and where the slain are, there is she.

Reflections upon Chap. XXXVIII.—How infinite the kindness and condescension of God, to appear himself, and catechize his obstinate friend for his humiliation, in order to prepare him for deliverance! And how much more difficult is it to converse with God than is generally thought by those who appeal to him! Infinite is his wisdom, who knows all things! and great his power, who can do, and has made, and manages all things. All things around us are full of God: all monitors to teach us concerning him, and to stir us up to worship and glorify him! But the boasted knowledge of mankind is vain and scanty, which can everywhere be nonplussed in the most common things of nature. Let me then never contend with God;—never pretend to be a judge of his nature, purposes, or works;—but be always content with things as they are; and to be led by him, as one blind, in the ways which I know not. If he has made all things in nature so well, my new covenant portion and lot is certainly exactly wise and kind. And if he take such care of the works of his hands, the most ravenous not excepted, it is impossible that he should forget, forsake, starve, or mismanage, his new covenant friends.

Chap. XXXIX.—Ver. 1—4. Is it by thy wisdom, power, care, and providence, that the wild goats and hinds are assisted in their painful births, or their young ones so well nourished? 5—8. Or that, while the tame ass is so dull and stupid, the wild ass is so nimble, untractable, regardless of mankind, and lodged and maintained in the desert mountains? 9—12. Art thou capable, by all thy power and skill, to tame a wild bull, and train him to the labours of the field performed by the ox? 13—18. Dost thou adorn with wings and feathers the ostrich, that is so careless of her eggs and young, that the sun must hatch the former, and Providence alone takes care of the latter, and so fleet in running with extended wings? 19—25. Hast thou given strength and bravery to the horse? Dost thou produce the triumphant shaking of his mane, or the neighing and snorting of his throat, when he is bent upon the battle? Canst thou make him to bounce like a grashopper? The disdainful and courageous snortings of his nostrils are terrible. When armies meet for battle, he paweth in the valley, fiercely priding himself in his strength: he springs forth to meet the armour of war, rushing into the battle without any fear of danger. Quite unaffrighted, he laughs at the terror of the battle: he turns not back from the sword. Over him, regardless, rattle and hiss the arrows of the quiver, the flaming spear, and ruinous lance. With fierceness and rage he gallops over and tears up the ground. For joy he reckons the sound of the trumpet but an encouraging blast: and at the full blowing of the trumpet he dances and sports for joy. He smells the battle afar off, the thunder-like roaring of the princes, and the alarm of war. 26. Is it by thy direction that hawks fly away so strongly, steadily, swiftly, unwearicdly, and cunningly, to catch their prey; and that they bask in the sun, or remove to warmer climates in the winter? 27—30. Is it by thy direction that eagles fly directly upward, or choose their rocky residence, or spy out and rush upon their prey?

Reflections upon Chap. XXXIX.—Behold how all things mark the excellencies of their Maker, and depend on God! The eyes of all wait on him; and he giveth them their meat in due season. And surely it is absurd for men to boast of beauty, strength, swiftness, or other bodily endowments, when one or more of the brute animals excel them in all these. But, alas! how often are we

MOREOVER the LORD answered Job, and said,

2 Shall he that [a] contendeth * with the Almighty instruct him? he that reproveth God, let him answer it.

3 ¶ Then Job answered the LORD, and said,

4 Behold, I am vile; what shall I answer thee? I will [b] lay mine hand upon my mouth.

5 Once have I spoken, but I will not answer; yea, twice, but I will proceed no further.

6 ¶ Then answered the LORD unto Job out of the whirlwind, and said,

7 [c] Gird up thy loins now like a man: I will demand of thee, and declare thou unto me.

8 Wilt thou also disannul my judgment? wilt thou condemn me, that thou mayest be righteous?

9 Hast thou [d] an arm like God? or canst thou thunder with a voice like him?

10 Deck thyself now with majesty and excellency, and array thyself with glory and beauty.

11 Cast abroad the rage of thy wrath; † and [e] behold every one that is proud, and abase him.

12 Look on every one that is proud, and bring him low; and tread down the wicked in their place.

13 [f] Hide them in the dust together, and bind their faces in secret.

14 Then will I also confess unto thee that thine own right hand can save thee.

15 ¶ Behold now ‡ behemoth,§ which I made with thee; he eateth grass as an ox.

16 Lo now, his strength is in his loins, and his force is in the navel ‖ of his belly.

17 He moveth his tail like a cedar:* the sinews of his stones † are wrapped together.

19 He is the chief of the ways of God: he that made him can make his sword to approach ‡ unto him.

20 Surely the mountains bring him forth food, where all the beasts of the field play.

21 He lieth under the shady trees, in the covert of the reed, and fens.

22 The shady trees cover him with their shadow; the willows of the brook compass him about.

23 Behold, he drinketh up a river, and hasteth not: § he trusteth that he can draw up Jordan into his mouth.

§ Behemoth is plural, and literally signifies cattle, in opposition to wild and destructive animals; and in this sense it is used, chap. 35. 11. Ps. 50. 10. & 73. 22. The most learned expositors, however, consider it as used in a singular sense, expressive of the magnitude and dignity of the animal. By some behemoth is supposed to be the elephant; by some the hippopotamus; by others the mammoth, or some such extinct animal. We feel disposed to consider it as neither, but to understand it as in chap. 35. 11, &c., for cattle in general; and leviathan as the sole animal described. The subject will be found discussed in many works, but a sufficient abridgment of the whole will be found in Harris' Natural History of the Bible.—ED.

‖ "Muscles."—ED.

* This description applies neither to the elephant nor hippopotamus, as the tail of both is comparatively trifling. That of the hippopotamus is the stronger, but is still short, and in appearance unimportant; nor can all the efforts of Scheuchzer give it any appearance of a cedar.—ED.

† Sinews of his thighs.—ED.

‡ "He that made him hath girt on his sword," or weapon for attack or defence. —ED.

§ Should a river overflow, he hasteneth not; he is secure though Jordan rush to his mouth.—Boothroyd.

* The marginal is the true translation, and prepares under the specific name of leviathan, for the introduction of the animal, thus already described by his general properties.—ED.

CHAPTER XLI.

(1) Job challenged to subdue leviathan: 1—10. (2) Leviathan described: 11—34.

A. M. cir. 2484. B. C. cir. 1520.

CANST thou draw out leviathan * with an hook? or his tongue with a cord which thou lettest down?

2 Canst thou put an hook into his nose? or bore his jaw through with a thorn?

3 Will he make many supplications unto thee? will he speak soft words unto thee?

4 Will he make a covenant with thee? wilt thou take him for a servant for ever?

5 Wilt thou play with him as with a bird? or wilt thou bind him for thy maidens?

6 Shall thy companions make a banquet of him? shall they part him among the merchants?

7 Canst thou [a] fill his skin with barbed irons? or his head with fish-spears?

8 Lay thine hand upon him, remember the battle, do no more.†

* The more ancient commentators supposed leviathan to be the whale; Schultens concluded it was an enormous serpent; and several have believed it to be directly descriptive of Satan. Since the days of Beza it has generally been supposed the crocodile. See M. Good, and Harris' Natural History of the Bible. From the description of ver. 33, we believe leviathan to be some of those extinct species of animals whose gigantic remains prove the existence of creatures 60 feet, and upwards in length, and 25 in height; but of whose instinctive endowments and habits, we can know nothing, unless they be contained in the wonderful description of this chapter.—ED.

like them in their worst qualities; like hinds in sinful cowardice; like wild asses in our unsettled temper; like unicorns or wild bulls in untameableness and rage in the net of affliction; like ostriches in stupidity and unconcern about the real welfare of children; like horses in pride and fury; like hawks and eagles in ambition, greediness, and cruelty!—But, if God feed these, he will never let the redeemed sheep of his pasture want. Lo, in what lofty manner he speaks of these animals! But how much sweeter to my soul are his descriptions of Jesus and his love, Jesus and his work, Jesus and his fulness!—All for men! all for me!

CHAP. XL.—Ver. 2. Has there not been enough said to chastise and convince thee of thy mistakes, in contending with, and censuring the Providence of God? 3. Job replied to the Lord, 4. Behold, with grief and shame, I acknowledge my own meanness, folly, and filthiness. I have nothing to say against thee, or for myself. 5. I have too often desired a dispute with thee; but I dare not defend my conduct. I dare not proceed further in such bold and presumptuous expressions and accusations of thy Providence. 6. Job's acknowledgment of his sin, and profession of his repentance, not being sufficiently full, God further required him to pluck up his spirits if he could, and answer some further interrogations. 8. Wilt thou, in the manner of wicked men, arraign and attempt to overturn my sentence against thee, and my government of human affairs? Wilt thou censure me as unjust in afflicting thee, that thou mayest appear innocent? 9, 10. Art thou God's equal in infinite power, majesty, or glory? 11—14. Canst thou, as God, scatter abroad the tokens of thine anger; or exhibit thy frowns for the debasement and destruction of thy most powerful and insolent enemies? If so, I will acknowledge thou canst uphold thyself, and hast some pretence to contend with me? but, if not, it becomes thee humbly to submit to my most afflictive providences.——15—24. But, that thou mayest be further convinced of thy inability to contend with me, behold how incapable thou art of contending with the elephant or river-horse, which I formed along with thee as thy fellow-creature, and not far from thy residence? He quietly feeds upon the herbs produced by the earth. Behold what strength is in his loins; what mighty force is in the warped sinews of his belly! His tail is large, stiff, and strong as a cedar; and with it, or his trunk, he could rend cedars. The sinews of his thighs are interwoven and wrapped together; his smaller bones are as pipes of brass, and the larger ones as bars of iron for strength. He is a principal creature on earth. The mighty God, who made him, and gives him his power, can easily subdue and destroy him. The mountains afford him pasture, while the other wild beasts securely sport themselves around him. His ordinary residence is under the shadow of trees or reeds, growing in fens or on the banks of rivers. No outrageous overflowing of waters affrights him, or makes him to run off in haste. And while he dives into a river, or drinks excessively, no terror can make him leave off till his thirst be altogether quenched.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAP. XL.—To what arrogant quarrelling with God afflicted saints sometimes proceed! but it always issues in great shame and grief at last. Communion with God himself effectually convinces and humbles a saint, and makes him glad to part with his most beloved sins. But there is need of thorough convictions and humiliation to prepare us for remarkable deliverance. And it is unsafe to heal wounded consciences slightly, or to catch at comforts to be rid of convictions. Men may be humbled, and yet not duly humbled. God takes pleasure in debasing the proud, who attempt to rival his honours. And wo to him that contends with his Maker! But easily can that God, who made, manages, feeds, lodges, and works these monstrous animals, provide for and manage me and all my concerns!

CHAP. XLI. Ver. 1, 2. And to give thee another evidence of thy weakness even to contend with one of my creatures, canst thou, by a hook fastened in his tongue, nose, or jaw, draw the crocodile, or the toothed whale, out of the water? 3—5. Canst thou force him to supplicate thy favour to let him go, or make him enter into an agreement to serve thee? or canst thou make him a mean of diverting thyself and children; 6. Wilt thou, and thy partners in catching him, make a feast upon his flesh, or part your shares of him among the merchants? 7. Where is the dart with which thou canst penetrate his skin, or the fish-spear that can wound his head? 8. Touch him if thou darest; immediate destruction will prevent thy remembrance of the conflict or repeating thy blow. 9. The hope of taking him is quite vain. The very sight of him is enough to terrify and dispirit one. 10. No, not the fiercest dare awake him when sleeping, or stir him up when resting himself. Who then is able to contend with me, who am infinitely more strong and terrible? 11. And, since everything in the world is my sole property, who hath prevented me with favours, that I should repay them? or who, by first attacking me, hath forced me to submit to his terms of peace? ——12. But to take a particular view of the strength and well-proportioned parts of the monster which I have mentioned; 13. Who dare strip him of his scaly skin, or put a bridle in his mouth! 14. Who dare open his jaws? The surrounding rows of his teeth are terror itself. 15—17. They, as well as his scales, are closely and inseparably connected. 18. His neesings, while he lies gaping in the sun, make a light to shine, and the water, which he spouts up into the air, reflects the sunbeams. His sparkling eyes emit a reddish and bright shining light. 19—21. How terribly hot is the stream of breath which proceeds from his mouth or nostrils? 22. In his neck strength lodges to an amazing degree. Before his face sorrow and desolation triumphantly leap, as, without fear or pity, he destroys every animal he meets with. 23. The flakes of his flesh are, as it were, soldered into a lump of metal, which cannot be moved or easily cut asunder. 24. His heart consists of the most solid flesh; and is quite destitute of every form of compassion. 25. When he appears above water, the courageous mariners are rendered almost distracted with terror, and forced to their confessions and prayers, expecting nothing but present death. 26—29. No sword, spear, dart, javelin, arrows, or slinged stones, can be made to penetrate his body. 30. Without hurt or pain he makes his bed on sharp-pointed rocks, stones, or pieces of ice. 31. When he breathes and tumbles about in the water, he makes it to foam and rage, as if it were a boiling pot full of ointment. 32. When he swims along, he leaves the furrows behind him all marked with froth and foam, on the surface of the sea. 33. No animal on earth is equally fearless and terrible. 34. With contempt he beholds the highest animals or loftiest ships, and brings them down with a sweep of his tail, tearing and rending them at his pleasure. He is king of all the huge and fierce-looking monsters.

[*] It must be readily admitted, that if behemoth and leviathan be the river-horse and the crocodile, then "no one would dream of interpreting these words literally;" but, if on the other hand, behemoth, as elsewhere in this same book, be a generic and not a specific name; and if leviathan be, for strength, courage, and natural defence, "chief of the ways of God," and, by consequence, one of those extinct animals described by Cuvier and others, then might it be questionable were the description pronounced merely figurative. To the observers of nature, who have examined the wonderful night lamps afforded by various creatures both by land and sea, to those who have further examined the terrible electrical powers possessed by others; the existence of an animal whose breath became luminous, and possessed of the electric power of literally sending "sparks of fire" out of his mouth, will appear neither extravagant in supposition, nor impossible in fact. Had some ancient traveller spoken of a fish that "wielded the lightning, and smote to death the invader of its waters," this, some years ago, would have been pronounced absolutely false, or, at best, figurative; but the student of natural history would now instantly recognise it as a literal description of the gymnotus.—ED.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAP. XLI.—If I am so unacquainted with animals, how scanty must be my knowledge of their infinite Maker! If these are a terror to me, how much more ought the Almighty, and his infinite Majesty! If I could not tame or manage some one of these, how dare I presume to attempt wresting the government of Providence out of God's hand! Surely then, above all, I must not dare to imagine him my debtor, or to interrogate him concerning his conduct. And if my God governs these monsters, I need not be afraid of either men or devils. But why should I indulge pride, when, after all my boastings, I am to have some ugly and ravenous monster my superior in it?

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAP. XLII.—How serious and humble fellowship with God makes a soul! And it is a great mercy that, when he demands of us answers of obedience, we may freely demand of him knowledge and grace to answer his requirements. If his gracious convictions render us exceeding vile and loathsome in our own view, let us expect that our deliverance is at hand. Jesus' blood and grace can more than balance our sins. Whom God humbles and pardons he delights to honour and acknowledge as his own. Yes, tenderly he regards his afflicted saints, notwithstanding their peevish quarrellings with him. He resents, in the most humiliating manner, the injuries done to them by their angry friends: and he often finds them sadly mistaken who were positive of their being in the right. But it is pleasant to see saints reconciled to one another through Jesus' death, in order to their enjoyment of comfortable fellowship with 8 Therefore take unto you now [f] seven bullocks and seven rams, and [g] go to my servant Job, and offer up for yourselves a burnt-offering; and my servant Job shall [h] pray for you: for [i] him will I accept: lest I deal with you [k] after your folly, in that ye have not spoken of me the thing which is right, like my servant Job.

9 ¶ So Eliphaz the Temanite, and Bildad the Shuhite, and Zophar the Naamathite [l] went, and did according as the LORD commanded them: the LORD also accepted [m] Job.

10 And the LORD [n] turned the captivity of Job, when he prayed for his friends: also the LORD [o] gave Job twice as much as he had before.

11 [p] Then came there unto him all his brethren, and all his sisters, and all they that had been of his acquaintance before, and did eat bread with him in his house; and they [q] bemoaned him, and comforted him over all the evil that the LORD had brought upon him: every man also gave him a piece of money, and every one an ear-ring of gold.

12 So the LORD [r] blessed the latter end of Job more than his beginning: for he had fourteen thousand sheep, and six thousand camels, and a thousand yoke of oxen, and a thousand she asses.

13 ¶ [s] He had also seven sons and three daughters.

14 And he called the name of the first, [t] Jemima; and the name of the second, [t] Kezia; and the name of the third, [t] Keren-happuch.

15 And in all the land were no women found [t] so fair as the daughters of Job; and their father [u] gave them inheritance among their brethren.

16 After this lived Job an [x] hundred and forty years, and [y] saw his sons, and his sons' sons, even four generations.

God. And our consolation is certainly approaching when our repentance towards God, faith towards our Lord Jesus Christ, and forgiving kindness to, and prayer for, injurious friends, are become remarkable. God can easily make all things concur for the welfare or enrichment of his people. And it is absurd therefore to despair in distress, when this very book was written for our encouragement in it.—But was not Job a type of our blessed Redeemer? He was infinitely rich and righteous; yet for our sakes he became poor, till he had not where to lay his head. Quickly was he reduced to the depths of abasement: and behold how he lay bearing our sins, and carrying our sorrows, in the stable—in the manger—in the garden—on the cross, and in the grave! Stupendous and amazing were the troubles, the assaults, he suffered from God—from sinners—from saints! How tempted—how reproached—how afflicted and tormented! But marvellous was his faith, resignation, and patience; and undeserved and powerful his intercession; till at last he arose into illustrious and lasting glory and honour; and a numerous family of Jewish and Gentile saints succeeded and proceeded from his troubles.

ADDITIONAL EDITORIAL NOTES ON THE BOOK OF JOB.

CHAP. I. Ver. 6. The sons of God came to present themselves before the Lord, and Satan came also among them.—Of the invisible kingdom of God we know literally nothing beyond what God is pleased to reveal; therefore, when it pleases God to reveal it to us, it must needs be by corresponding emblems from visible governments. Still it must be remembered that these emblems have originals of which they are the copies; and that, whilst through these emblems "we see but in part, and know but in part," yet we see there is a heavenly worship, and an invisible government in which spirits of evil may accuse the children of God in heaven, even as their coadjutors, evil spirited men, have ever done on earth; and in which they may obtain a limited power of inflicting injury, even as, on earth, wicked men obtain a similar power; while JEHOVAH restrains both, and finally compels all things to "work together for good to them that love God."

CHAP. IV. Ver. 1. Eliphaz the Temanite.—The name "Eliphaz," and his residence "Teman," compared with Gen. 36. 11, cannot leave a doubt that Job lived long posterior to the days of Abraham; and that, consequently, he was well acquainted with the Abrahamic covenant of promise.——Ver. 20. They are destroyed.—"Beaten down" as insects by idle and unthinking boys. "They are ever perishing" in succession, yet no one takes warning.

CHAP. V. Ver. 2. Envy slayeth the silly one.—For envy the margin gives indignation, and this is the true reading. Wrath and indignation do not signify the suicidal influence of a man's own passions, but the righteous "severity of God," Rom. 11. 22, as will appear by the ascription of all chastisements to his will and power, ver. 11—14.

CHAP. XII. Ver. 2. Wisdom shall die with you.—Were this a mere irony, as many interpreters assume, then would not Job immediately claim equal wisdom for himself, (ver. 3.) but plead comparative ignorance, to make the irony effective. But irony is not a figure for deep and poignant affliction. The phrase is not therefore irony, but a simple acknowledgment that his learned friends were wise, and would be accompanied with wisdom to the grave.

CHAP. XIII. Ver. 27. Thou puttest my feet also in the stocks.—Of what kind they were is not known. From the following reference to paths, they were most probably a species of clog locked on the foot, and used to prevent a slave or prisoner from escaping.——Settest a print upon the heels of my feet.—The allusion is very obscure; but if the stocks were, as we have supposed, clogs, the allusion may be to some peculiar mark upon the heel, whereby a runaway culprit might be distinguished and traced.

CHAP. XIV. Ver. 4. Who can bring a clean thing out of an unclean? not one.—As water cannot by its own gravity, rise higher than its fountain head; neither can a descendant of Adam and Eve become by their own efforts better than they, and they, alas! were ungrateful rebels. Blessed be his name, who, while we were yet enemies, hath reconciled us by the death of his Son. Rom. 5. 10.

CHAP. XVII. Ver. 1. The graves are ready for me.—The sepulchres of Edom are generally in extensive chambers, scooped out in the rocks. In these are numerous niches or shelves ready to receive the dead bodies.

CHAP. XIX. Ver. 26. Yet in my flesh shall I see God.—"Worms" and "body" are not in the original, so that we are not bound to contemplate them in the exposition. May not the verse be paraphrased thus: "Though as my skin is destroyed by disease, this flesh beneath it be destroyed by death, yet in my (resurrection) flesh shall I see God," 1 John 3. 2.

CHAP. XXIV. Ver. 1. Seeing times are not hidden from the Almighty.—The diseased state of public morals and events, periodically attaining a crisis, in which they strikingly resemble diseases of the human body.——His days.—God's appointed days of judgment, as in the times of Noah, Lot, and the latter days of Jerusalem, Gen. 3. & 6. 5. & 7, 13. & 18. 17, 20. & 19. 15, 22. Luke 19. 42.

CHAP. XXIX. Ver. 24. If I laughed on them, they believed it not.—"If I smiled upon them they became not confident;" that is, my utmost familiarity never bred contempt; a result ever difficult to attain, and requiring the most exact tempering of affection with firmness, of condescension with dignity, and of rebuke with tenderness—a result, of which polish may produce an imitation, while grace alone can exhibit the original.

CHAP. XXX. Ver. 7. Under the nettles.—"Under the briars."—M. Good.

CHAP. XXXVIII. Ver. 1. The Lord answered Job out of the whirlwind.—No notice is taken of the transition from Elihu, God visible in human form, to JEHOVAH invisible in the whirlwind, or stormy cloud. To those who feel any difficulty in identifying Elihu, (God himself, see Mat. 1. 23.) with JEHOVAH, it may be useful to examine the appearance of JEHOVAH to Abraham, and his familiar converse with him, Gen. 18. 13—33; and afterwards his appearance to Moses, Exod. 3. 2. & 19. 9, 16, 18, 21. & 20. 18, 22; and recollect, that, in each case, this was the same JEHOVAH variously manifested: and when these facts are compared, the various appearances in Job will be more easily understood as alike manifesting "the Word that was with God and was God."——Ver. 38. Mazzaroth.—The twelve monthly signs of the zodiac.——Arcturus.—Most probably the Great Bear, the apparent nightly changes of which always render it a most remarkable object to observers.

CHAP. XXXIX. Ver. 29. Her eyes behold afar off.—The extraordinary far-sightedness of the eagle is well known. It can descry its prey on the ground, when, to the human eye, it is perfectly invisible in the clouds: those species that live upon the dead fully realize our Lord's description, Mat. 24. 28, and an animal is scarcely fallen until they appear on the verge of the horizon hastening to its destruction.

CHAP. XL. Ver. 19. He is the chief of the ways of God.—The greatest size of the hippopotamus is 17 feet in length, and 7 in height—a description that in point of animal size and power, the only points in question, could never entitle it to the character in the text.

THE BOOK

P S A L M S.

The Book of Psalms is one of the most extensive and useful in Holy Scripture, as it is everywhere suited to the case of the saints. It is at first much mixed with complaints and supplications, and at last issues in pure and lasting praise. That Heman composed Psalm lxxxviii, Ethan the lxxxixth, and Moses the xcth, is certain. But whether those under the name of Asaph were mostly penned by him, or only assigned to be sung by him as a master of the temple music, as others were to Jeduthun, or to the sons of Korah, or other chief musicians, we cannot determine. Some, as Psalm lxxiv, lxxix, cxxvi, and cxxxvii, appear to have been composed after the captivity to Babylon was begun; but by whom we know not. The rest, including those two marked with the name of Solomon, might be composed by David, the sweet Psalmist of Israel.

Twenty-five of the Psalms have no title at all; and whether the titles of the rest are of divine authority is not altogether agreed. But when it is considered that these titles everywhere appear in the Hebrew originals, and how often they serve as a key to the Psalm, and are sometimes connected with it by the accentuating points, there is no real ground to suspect their authenticity. Nor are interpreters agreed with respect to the signification of some of the Hebrew words standing in these titles. We think that MASCHIL always signifies that the Psalm is designed for instruction; Psalms xxxii, xlii, xliii, xlv, lii, liii, liv, lv, lxxiv, lxxviii, lxxxviii, lxxxix. MICHTAM denotes the precious or golden nature of the Psalm; as xvi, lvi—lx. ALTASCHITH, that the scope of the Psalm is to deprecate destruction; lvii, lviii, lix. MUTHLABBEN, that the psalm was composed on the occasion of the death of his son, or of Goliath the duellist; Psalm ix. AIJELETH SHAHAR, that its subject is Jesus Christ, the hind of the morning; Psalm xxii. JONATH-ELEM-REHOKIM, that David is therein represented as a mute dove among foreigners; Psalm lvi. SHOSHANNIM, SHOSHANNIM-EDUTH, or SHUSHAN-EDUTH, may either signify that Christ and his people, who are lilies, or lilies of the congregation or testimony, are the subject of it; or that it was sung on an instrument of six strings; Psalms xlv, lx, lxix, lxxx, as SHEMINITH denotes an instrument of eight strings; Psalms vi, xii. MAHALATH may either signify the disease, and MAHALATH-LEANOTH the afflicting disease; or MAHALOTH may signify a wind instrument of music; liii. and lxxxviii. NEGINATH and NEGINOTH denote stringed instruments of music; Psalms lxi, iv, vi, liv, lv, lxvii, lxxvi. NEHILOTH, wind ones; Psalm v. GITTITH, a musical instrument, or tune invented at Gath; Psalms viii, lxxxi, and lxxxiv. ALAMOTH, the virginals, or a song to be sung by the virgins; Psalm xlvi. SHIGGAION or SHIGIONOTH may denote the diversified matter or tune of the Psalm; Psalm vii. The cxxth, and fourteen next following, are called SONGS of DEGREES; perhaps because they were sung on the different steps of the temple stairs; or were sung at certain halts made by David and the Israelites when they brought up the ark of God from Kirjath-jearim to Jerusalem; 2 Sam. vi.; or were sung by the Hebrews at their different rests, when they came up from the country to their three solemn feasts; or were partly sung by the Jews at their different resting places in their return from Babylon; Lev. xxiii. Ezra ii.

The Hebrews divided this book into FIVE, ending with Psalms xli, lxxii, lxxxix, cvi, and cl; the first four of which are concluded with AMEN. Interpreters have attempted to arrange or class the Psalms into a variety of different forms. To me it appears not improper to distinguish them into I. INSTRUCTIVE; which are either (1) HISTORICAL, relating what God had done for the Psalmist, or for the Jewish nation, &c. as xviii, lxviii, lxxiii, civ, cv, cvi, cxiv, cxxxv, cxxxvi. Most of which are also EUCHARISTIC; or (2) DOCTRINAL, declaring and explaining the principles and duties of religion; as Psalms i, xiv, xv, xix, xxxvi, xxxvii, xlix, l, liii, lxiv, lxxvi, lxxvii, lxxviii, lxxxi, lxxxii, xc, ci, cxii, cxix, cxxvii, cxxxi, cxxxiii, cxxxix.—II. PROPHETIC; foretelling events relative to Christ or his church; as Psalms ii, viii, xvi, xxi, xxii, xxiv, xxix, xl, xlv, xlvii, xlviii, lxvii, lxviii, lxix, lxxii, lxxxvii, lxxxix, xciii, xcv, xcvi, xcviii, c, cx, cxvii, cxxxii, cxlix.; not a few of which are also EUCHARISTIC. III. CONSOLATORY; in which the Psalmist comforts himself and others in the promises, perfections, or works of God; as Psalms iv, xi, xxiii, xxvii. xxxi, xxxvii, xlvi, lviii, lxxiii, xci, cxxi, cxxv, cxxviii, cxxix. IV. PETITIONARY; in which he bewails his own or the church's condition, and supplicates deliverance; as Psalms iii, v, vi, vii, x, xii, xiii, xvii, xx, xxv, xxvi, xxvii, xxviii, xxxv, xxxviii, xli, xlii, xliii, xliv, li, liv, lv, lvii, lix, lx, lxi, lxiii, lxiv, lxx, lxxi, lxxiv, lxxix, lxxx, lxxxiii, lxxxv, lxxxvi, lxxxviii, cii, cxix, cxx, cxxiii, cxxx, cxxxii, cxxxvii, cxl, cxli, cxlii, xviii. Seven of these, in which the Psalmist makes confession of his sin, viz. Psalms vi, xxii, xxxviii, li, cii, cxxx, cxliii, are called PENITENTIAL. V. EUCHARISTIC; in which he stirs up himself and others to praise and thank the Lord for his favours; as Psalms ix, xviii, xxx, xxxiii, xxxiv, lx, lxv—lxviii, xcv—c, ciii—cviii, cxi, cxiii, cxv—cxviii, cxxii, cxxiv, cxxvi, cxxxiv—cxxxvi, cxxxviii, cxliv—cxlviii, cxlix, cl. But indeed historical narratives, doctrinal instructions, prophecies, consolations, supplications, praises, and thanksgivings, are often so pleasantly and profitably connected in the same Psalm, that it is difficult to assign it to one class rather than to another. And what is HISTORICAL, as it relates to David and the Jewish church, is often TYPICAL and so PROPHETIC, as it relates to Jesus Christ and the gospel church or heavenly state. Many, too, of the SUPPLICATIONS respecting deliverances from, or the destruction of enemies, are to be considered as real PREDICTIONS of the events, they being dictated by the inspiration of him who can declare the end from the beginning.

IN expounding the foregoing books of the Divine Word, the Editor has often felt much regret at the narrowness of the space to which he was necessarily confined; and though, by the liberal kindness of the Publishers, he has been enabled to add a considerable amount of supplementary notes, yet still has he felt anxious to say more in elucidation or application of their sacred contents. But this regret which he has felt in his past labours, he feels doubled on approaching the Book of Psalms. That Book presents itself before him united to all the music of the ear, the voice, and the heart. It has occupied much of his study, not as a mere subject of criticism, but as a light to Jesus in all his offices of Prophet, Priest, and King—and specially as a key to his inmost heart—a spiritual revelation and record of those "prayers and supplications, with strong crying and tears," which he offered up in the days of his flesh," (Heb. 5. 7.) as well as a descriptive history of his kingdom of providence, grace, judgment, and glory in all its periods, past, present, or to come.

To this conclusion the Editor was conducted by a process nearly as follows:—1. From the confident reference to the Psalms made by our Lord himself, more especially (Luke 24. 24.) in his closing discourse immediately before his ascension. "And he said unto them, these are the words which I spake unto you while I was yet with you, that all things must be fulfilled which were written in the law of Moses, and in the Prophets, and in the Psalms, concerning me."

2. From the equally confident reference of the apostles to the same authority; as, for example, amongst many others, Acts 13. 33., where a Psalm not unfrequently represented as descriptive of the instalment of David on his throne in Israel, is distinctly affirmed by the Holy Spirit to be descriptive of the sitting down of the glorified Saviour upon his throne in heaven.

3. By the evident insufficiency of every other principle of interpretation. Throughout the entire series of Psalms, he found so frequently and so constantly the character of some one so righteous, that to apply it to David would outrage all his history; and which, to apply to any mere man, would gainsay all observation and experience. But this righteous character, in all its various forms of exhibition, he found most exactly to correspond to the evangelical history of Christ: the conclusion was therefore inevitable—this character was that of Christ. It was in contemplating the first Psalm, that this conclusion first forced itself upon his mind. He had often heard that psalm, by what is called the principle of "accommodation," expounded as descriptive of the "happiness of the godly," contrasted with "the misery of the ungodly;" and, in this interpretation, all ordinary authority induced him to acquiesce. Yet still did he feel himself unable to account for the fact—that the description so far exceeded the reality. "Blessed is the man that walketh not in the counsel of the ungodly, nor standeth in the way of sinners, nor sitteth in the seat of the scornful: but his delight is in the law of the LORD; and in his law doth he meditate day and night. And he shall be like a tree planted by the rivers of water, that bringeth forth his fruit in his season: his leaf also shall not wither: and whatsoever he doeth shall prosper." In real life he had never seen such a man; he had never read of such a one amongst the most eminent scripture saints. Why then did the Spirit of God, in full command of all the words of truth, proceed to draw a moral picture so far surpassing the alleged original? This was a question to which no satisfactory answer was ever presented to his mind. Yet this was the very question that never ceased to recur demanding a solution. True, he had found some excellent commentators, amongst whom may be recorded the honoured names of Gill, Romaine, and Horne, who had taught that the opening of this Psalm was descriptive of Christ; but, whereas for this opinion they assigned no obvious principle of interpretation, he found in it no positive satisfaction, because it appeared as much depending upon the principle of accommodation as that from which he was anxious to retreat. It was while thus puzzled between these two forms of authority, in neither of which he could discover any principle of interpretation, that his mind was earnestly turned to inquire whether any such principle actually existed. In human science he readily and clearly perceived its existence. He saw that if a book contained the names and descriptions of a thousand plants, the accomplished botanist might have some search, but no difficulty, in discovering, amidst the thousand, any plant whatsoever, and declaring its name, provided merely that the description were truly and fully drawn. To the inexperienced eye, many of the plants might appear not merely similar, but the same; but the distinctive characteristics would, to the eye of the botanist, be as obvious as the sun at noon-day. And were there, in the Scriptures, any such simple principle of interpretation as this, how easily might it be applied in directing our inquiries and settling our conclusions. And was there not such a principle, and was not this the very principle, the mere, but exact correspondence of the recorded description with the object described, and its obvious want of such exact correspondence with any other object? Of the existence and application of this principle, the Editor soon found numerous examples in the New Testament; for instance, Acts 2. 29—36. Now, in many copies of the Scriptures lying before him he found this Psalm distinctly interpreted as primarily descriptive of David, and only in some secondary, or derivative, and typical sense, applicable to Christ. It is remarkable, however, that the Apostle makes no such distinction, but directly affirms that it is a prophecy concerning our Lord. Now, from what principle of interpretation does he draw this conclusion? From the simple and obvious principle that it is not true concerning David, "for David, (when he speaks) is not ascended into the heavens;" but is literally true concerning Christ whom God hath "raised up," of which fact the apostles "all are witnesses." This principle perceived—and perceived it irresistibly commends itself to adoption—the meaning of the first Psalm became most obvious. It did not describe any of the mere children of men from Adam, their head downward. But the moment Christ is discovered, it is found exactly to correspond to the evangelical history of "the days of his flesh." It is, therefore, not a prophecy, but a description of Christ—a moral, a spiritual picture of his character drawn by the Holy Ghost, by whom the holy men of old being moved did speak; and by which, before he appeared, the church knew what to expect; and by which, when he did appear, she should have instantly recognised her Lord.

The following are accordingly the principal rules of interpretation by which the Editor has been guided, and to which, however unimportant they may appear, he ventures to solicit the earnest attention of the disciples of the Bible.

1. The Old Testament is interpreted by the Spirit speaking in the New Testament; even as the "perfect day" more clearly exhibits, but does not change what is dimly seen at the dawn.
2. When one part of a Psalm is thus, by the Holy Ghost, applied to Christ, every other part of the Psalm must be applied to him in a way consistent with the analogy of faith in the other Scriptures.
3. When one Psalm is found, by quotation in the New Testament, to apply to Christ, every parallel Psalm must likewise apply to him.
4. When a description in the whole or part of a Psalm is found absolutely inapplicable to any of the patriarchs, prophets, apostles, or other saints, but, at the same time, perfectly applicable to Christ, then, according to the principle above developed, that Psalm is not to be interpreted of such patriarch, prophet, apostle, or saint, but of Christ in his person, qualifications, trials, warfare, victories, or kingdom.
5. A large amount of interpretation must, as in the other Scriptures, be referred to the grammatical construction, especially in the bearing of the words, "I, thou, he," and their plurals, taken in conjunction with the attributes or acts ascribed to them respectively.

The narrow limits of notation to which the Editor is necessarily confined, will seldom leave him at liberty fully to develop these principles. All that the most rigid compression can effect he purposes to attempt. But still he feels that much will be wanting which he feels anxious, but thus unable, to furnish. This circumstance is to him matter of deep regret, as he believes this to be the book of Scripture which, in this generation of the church, most requires an evangelical interpretation. Such an interpretation has long been to him a serious, but most delightful study; and should the Head of the church be pleased to enable him to finish the present series of brief notes upon the whole Scriptures, he purposes next, if the Lord will, immediately to follow them with a separate and ample commentary on the Book of Psalms.—Ed.]

PSALM I.

(1) Character of the blessed man: 1—3. (2) Misery and judgment of the wicked: 4—6.

A. M. cir. 3554.
B. C. cir. 450.

BLESSED [*] is the man that walketh not in the counsel of the ungodly, nor standeth in the way of sinners, nor sitteth in the seat of the [†] scornful:

2 But his delight [‡] is in the law of the LORD; and in his law doth he meditate day and night.

3 And he shall be like a tree planted by the rivers of water, that bringeth forth his fruit in his season: his leaf also shall not [§] wither: and whatsoever he doeth shall prosper.[‖]

4 The ungodly are not so: but are like the chaff which the wind driveth away.

5 Therefore the ungodly shall not stand in the judgment, nor sinners in the congregation of the righteous.

6 For the LORD knoweth the way of the righteous: but the [] way [] of the ungodly shall perish.

[*] Rather, "O the blessednesses of that man," that man of a thousand, who walketh not in the counsel of the unjust, who withhold God's dues of love and obedience; who standeth not in the way of transgressors to meet them, or converse with them on their own terms; who sitteth not in the seat of the mocker of God's authority and institutions. Has any son of Adam ever realised these three negatives in character, but Christ? Is not this then the Christ described by character?—Ed.

[‡] His will, his desire, is in the law, that is, in all the doctrine or revelation of God.

A. M. cir. 2904.
B. C. cir. 1040.

WHY do the heathen [*] rage, and the people [†] imagine a vain thing?

2 The kings of the earth set themselves, and the rulers take counsel together, against the LORD, and against [a] his Anointed, saying,

3 Let us break their bands asunder, and cast away their cords from us.

4 [b] He that sitteth in the heavens shall laugh: the LORD [*] shall have them in derision.

5 Then shall he speak unto them in his wrath, and [†] vex [‡] them in his sore displeasure.

6 Yet have I [§] set my King [‖] upon my holy hill of Zion.

7 I will declare [*] the decree: the LORD hath said unto me, Thou art my Son; [†] this day have I begotten [‡] thee.

8 [c] Ask of me, and I shall give thee the heathen for thine inheritance, and the uttermost parts of the earth for thy possession.

9 [d] Thou shalt break them with a rod of iron; thou shalt dash them in pieces like a potter's vessel.

10 [e] Be wise now therefore, O ye kings: be instructed, ye judges of the earth.

11 [f] Serve the LORD with fear, and rejoice with trembling.

12 [g] Kiss the Son, lest he be angry, and ye perish from the way, when his wrath is kindled but a little. Blessed are all they that put their trust in him.

Reflections upon Psalm I.—How dangerous is the company of wicked men, and how headlong the progress of sin! They who walk in the counsel of sinners will quickly wait for opportunities of sinning, and will with pleasure accompany with scorners. But precious and useful are the oracles of God, as means to preserve us from temptation, and to animate us to every good word and work. And it is the heavenly-minded and thoughtful Christian that will be the thriving one. It is absurd for saints to study conformity to this world, when God has marked such a difference, such an opposition, between them and the men of it. And when their end answers so exactly to their life, and to the glory of the divine perfections. May God's company, God's word, God's influences, God's approbation, and God's final judgment, and the eternity consequent thereon, be ever dear to my heart!

Reflections upon Psalm II.—Bitter and inveterate is the enmity of mankind against Jesus Christ our Saviour. The agents of hell, Jews and Gentiles, readily drop their private animosities, to harmonize in opposition to him! If his cause is to be run down, they cordially unite in the work! And not well-grounded fear, but enraged enmity, makes the princes of the earth to oppose his kingdom, which is not of this world. But in vain are all their contrivances and fury. His church, and every believer, is fixed on a rock, against which the powers of hell and earth can never prevail. Jesus' person, as the only begotten Son of God from eternity, and declared to be such in his resurrection from the dead, and the new covenant made with him, are their everlasting foundation. His intercession, and the saving power of his Spirit, subdue them to himself. But dreadful is the vengeance executed on his Jewish, heathen, antichristian, or other opposers! And if the great are not good, they shall receive the deeper damnation. O how mixed is the service of Christ on earth! Whilst we rejoice in him and his fulness, we need to tremble on account of our own guilt and corruption, and the snares and dangers that attend us. But holy jealousy and filial fear produce joys unspeakable and full of glory. While the world contemn him, and riot in wantonness, let my soul kiss, receive, love, adore, and submit to God's Son; so shall I be blessed in him with all spiritual blessings in time and eternity.

LORD, [b] how are they increased that trouble me? many are they that rise up against me.

2 Many there be which say of my soul, [c] There is no help for him in God. Selah.*

d Though this word occurs upwards of seventy times in the Psalms, its meaning is much disputed. * Who speaks these words, David or some other? whosoever he be, it appears from ver. 12, that his confidence lies in his being righteous. Now, there is none righteous but Christ, (compare Rom. 3. 10. 1 John 2. 1.) the conclusion is therefore inevitable: this is a prayer of Christ, the Holy Spirit speaking by the prophet, foreshowing to the church how he would pray; as the same Spirit speaking in the evangelists, has recorded for the church how he did pray. ‖ Such petitions against enemies frequently occurring in the Psalm have afforded occasion for infidels to object, and even for believers to plead a difference between the spirit of the Jewish and Christian dispensations. With those who sit in the "seat of the scorner," we may not here plead, but with believers we must. 1. To them we say, by whom spake the prophets of old? by the Holy Ghost, (2 Pet. 1. 22.) never by their own spirit. 2. Does not God punish rebellious sinners, according to this word? Certainly. Then, does God ever do what the holiest may not entreat him to do? 3. Do not men, the very objectors, appeal to courts of law for redress of injuries? And may not Christ, then, appeal to his Father for the destruction of the works of the devil? 1 John 3. 8.—Ed.

PSALM V.

A prayer amidst enemies.

A. M. cir. 2983. B. C. cir. 1021.

¶ TO THE CHIEF MUSICIAN UPON NEHILOTH, A PSALM OF DAVID.

GIVE ear to my words, * O LORD; consider my meditation.

2 Hearken unto the voice of my cry, my King, and my God: for unto thee will I pray.

3 My voice shalt thou hear in the morning, O LORD; in the morning will I direct † my prayer unto thee, and will look up.

4 For thou art not a God that hath pleasure in wickedness; neither shall evil dwell with thee.

5 The foolish shall not stand ‡ in thy sight: thou hatest all workers of iniquity.

6 Thou shalt destroy them that speak leasing: the LORD will abhor § the bloody and deceitful man.

7 But as for me, I will come into thy house in the multitude of thy mercy; and in thy fear will I worship toward ‖ thy holy temple.

8 Lead me, O LORD, in thy righteousness, because of mine enemies; make thy way straight before my face.

9 For there is no * faithfulness † in their mouth; their inward part is ‡ very wickedness; their throat is an open sepulchre; they flatter with their tongue.

10 § Destroy ‖ thou them, O God; let them fall * by their own counsels; cast them out in the multitude of their transgressions; for they have rebelled against thee.

11 But let all those that put their trust in thee rejoice: let them ever shout for joy, because † thou defendest them: let them also that love thy name be joyful in thee.

12 For thou, LORD, wilt bless the righteous; with favour wilt thou [a] compass him as with a shield.

* Who speaks these words, David or some other? whosoever he be, it appears from ver. 12, that his confidence lies in his being righteous. Now, there is none righteous but Christ, (compare Rom. 3. 10. 1 John 2. 1.) the conclusion is therefore inevitable: this is a prayer of Christ, the Holy Spirit speaking by the prophet, foreshowing to the church how he would pray; as the same Spirit speaking in the evangelists, has recorded for the church how he did pray. See especially John 17.—Ed.

‖ Such petitions against enemies frequently occurring in the Psalm have afforded occasion for infidels to object, and even for believers to plead a difference between the spirit of the Jewish and Christian dispensations. With those who sit in the "seat of the scorner," we may not here plead, but with believers we must. 1. To them we say, by whom spake the prophets of old? by the Holy Ghost, (2 Pet. 1. 22.) never by their own spirit. 2. Does not God punish rebellious sinners, according to this word? Certainly. Then, does God ever do what the holiest may not entreat him to do? 3. Do not men, the very objectors, appeal to courts of law for redress of injuries? And may not Christ, then, appeal to his Father for the destruction of the works of the devil? 1 John 3. 8.—Ed.

A prayer in deep sorrow, and in the midst of enemies.

A. M. cir. 2983. B. C. cir. 1021.

¶ TO THE CHIEF MUSICIAN ON NEGINOTH [a] UPON SHEMINITH, A PSALM OF DAVID.

O LORD, rebuke me * not in thine anger, neither chasten me in thy hot displeasure.

2 Have mercy upon me, O LORD; for I am [b] weak: O LORD, heal me; for [c] my bones are vexed.

3 My [d] soul is also sore vexed: but thou, O LORD, how long?

REFLECTIONS UPON PSALM III.—Whilst I here behold Jesus conflicting, crying, and conquering, and entering into his glory, let me think how often the greatest trials spring from whence we least expected them! from our own house, our near relations! How numerous the seed of the serpent; and how furious their opposition to Christ and his people! But if troubles drive us to our God and our duty, we shall be effectually protected, and honourably exalted. Our cries of faith shall be speedily answered from his temple, his heaven, his Christ. Confederacies of foes unnumbered, and savage as wild beasts, shall but enhance and sweeten our salvation and blessings, and shall bring upon themselves fearful and lasting ruin.

REFLECTIONS UPON PSALM IV.—In every distress God is a safe refuge to flee to: and the more of his kindness we have experienced, the more bold ought to be our prayers, and the stronger our faith. But base is the work, contemptible the character, and vile the desires, of the wicked, when compared with those of the godly.—What fear of God and his judgments, what serious self-examination, what cordial dedication to God through Christ, are necessary in them that are saved! —The wishes of the unregenerate are senseless and sensual: but exalted are the desires, readily granted the felicity, and unmoved the rest of them who firmly believe.

REFLECTIONS UPON PSALM V.—Meditation is the director, fervour the life, faith the presenter, and a reconciled God in Christ, as our own, the object, the morning a principal season, and patient expectation the attendant, of every true prayer. And while the holiness, justice, and mercy of God in Christ demand our sincerity, and encourage our boldness, in approaching to his throne of grace, the wickedness and danger of sinners, the number and mischievous intentions of our enemies, the

A meditation on the excellence of the name of the Lord.

¶ TO THE CHIEF MUSICIAN UPON GITTITH, A PSALM OF DAVID.

O LORD our Lord, how excellent is thy name [*] in all the earth! who hast set thy glory above the heavens.

2 Out of the mouth of babes and sucklings hast thou ordained strength because of thine enemies, that thou mightest still the enemy and the avenger.

3 When I consider thy heavens, the work of thy fingers, the moon and the stars, which thou hast ordained;

4 What is man, that thou art mindful of him? and the son of man, that thou visitest him?

5 For thou hast made him a little lower than the angels, and hast crowned him with glory and honour.

6 Thou madest him to have dominion over the works of thy hands; thou hast put all things under his feet:

[†] The denial of all iniquity, ver. 3, and the appeal to judgment on the ground of righteousness and integrity, (ver. 8—11,) could never have proceeded from David the son of Jesse. He confessed his sin, and the Holy Spirit hath recorded that sin for our warning, and his repentance and pardon for our encouragement. But the denial of iniquity, and the appeal to judgment on the ground of righteousness, are most becoming in David's Lord, (Mat. 22. 43,) who knew no sin. [*] The excellence of the name of God always appears in its full development of such grace as the believer requires under his peculiar circumstances. Thus to Abraham (Gen. 17. 1.) it was "the Almighty God," when his defenceless state constantly suggested the need of protection. Again to Moses in the solitudes of Horeb, (Exod. 3. 14.) it was "I am," when the changes of years suggested the excellence of an unchanging God. But to that same Moses, in the midst of the "thousands of Israel," the name is expanded, as it were, to embrace all the necessities of the time, and assure the faith of Moses in discharge of his arduous duties. Exod. 34. 6, 7. And when, in the fulness of the time, God hath sent forth his Son, (Gal. 4. 4.) and the Spirit of his Son, (Gal. 4. 6.) the excellence of his name is still further manifested in the baptismal title, and the apostolical benediction, revealing and glorifying Father, Son, and Holy Spirit. Mat. 28. 19. 2 Cor. 13. 14.—ED.

difficulty of our duty, and our need of immediate blessings, should keep us firmly in the exercise. Never should our brethren of mankind, and especially our fellow-saints, lack our warm remembrance in it: and from the prayer of faith, we may confidently expect the answer of peace. But, alas! miserable are the sinners, the rebels, against God and his Christ? How universal their corruption of heart—of tongue—of practice! How fearful the ruin that awaits them! But their contrivances to dishonour Jesus Christ, and afflict his people, or to deliver themselves, shall be made the means of their aggravated wo.

REFLECTIONS UPON PSALM VI.—Not even kings are exempted from the common miseries of life! But it is hard to support under sore sickness and a wounded spirit at once: and yet God's dearest saints have often the largest shares of them. There is no relief under such a burden, but to cast it on God. And when our sins have been great, so must be our sorrow. The removal of the sense of God's displeasure must be more earnestly desired than abatement of, or relief from, our sufferings. And if God ever regard us, it is neither for our righteousness, nor for our sorrows or sufferings, but for his mercy in Christ. However desirable it is to be with Christ in heaven, saints are to wish for life, while it is for the glory of God, and the good of his church.—But quickly they, who sow in tears, shall reap in joy. And if God answer one prayer, he will answer all that follow in faith. He is the same hearer of prayer yesterday, to-day, and for ever. But close fellowship with God effectually draws the saints from delight in, or intimacy with, the wicked: and quick and inevitable ruin awaits their impenitent injurers.

REFLECTIONS UPON PSALM VII.—While I here behold the much persecuted and reproached Jesus, in his perfect righteousness, justified by his Father, and avenged of all his enemies, Jewish, Heathen, &c., let me think how complete and commodious a refuge God is in every time of trouble! In him we can never be moved. However brutish and cruel our enemies be, while we are weak we are strong. No false accusation need dismay us, while we are conscious of our innocence, and have a gracious God to appeal to as our witness and judge. There is no kindness which he will not grant for the benefit of his people, and the glory of his own perfections. Out of his favour there is no safety, and in it there is no danger. If he justify us, none dare accuse or condemn us. And though our uprightness is not the condition of our eternal happiness, dreadful and unavoidable is the ruin of impenitent sinners. Their contrivances and attempts against the godly shall prove means of their own destruction; when they who trusted in the Lord, and kept his way, triumph in notes of endless praise.

REFLECTIONS UPON PSALM VIII.—How glorious is the name of our exalted IMMANUEL, and of God in him! Quickly shall his kingdom fill both heaven and earth, however despicable its oracles, ordinances, and professors, now appear to a carnal world. By the weakest instruments he accomplishes his greatest purposes, displays his power and grace, and treads and triumphs over Satan and his votaries. The glories of nature, but especially the graces of redemption, should continually lead our hearts to the contemplation of their glorious Author. How astonishing is it to see so many creatures subjected to miserable man; and especially to behold them all subjected to the once debased Christ!

REFLECTIONS UPON PSALM IX.—All success, granted by God to us, ought to animate us to the most hearty praises and thanksgiving for that and all other deliverances. And while prosperity renders us thankful, our chief joy must be in the God of our mercies. It is himself, as the most High in Christ, that is our infallible security against fear or danger. And though the wicked prosper for a time, they are marked for lasting destruction. And when God begins, he will make an end. Thrice happy are they, however poor and oppressed, who have this God of Jacob, this high Sovereign, this righteous Judge, for the object of their knowledge and trust! The more they know of him, the more they will trust in him. Sweet shall be their songs of deliverance in the church, in the ordinances below, but especially in the heavenly Zion above. But while God remembers them in mercy, and grants their long waited for requests, fearfully will he manifest his holiness, equity, and power, in the temporal and eternal ruin of his and their wicked enemies.—But ought we not here chiefly to contemplate, with joy and thankfulness, the blessings of redemption, and the victories of our Redeemer over sin, death, and hell, Jews, heathens, and antichristians, and all other incorrigible opposers; and to believe that we through him shall be more than conquerors!

[a] HOW long wilt thou forget me, O LORD? for ever? how long wilt thou hide thy face from me?

3 [d] Consider and hear me, O LORD my God: lighten mine eyes, lest I sleep the sleep of death;

4 [e] Lest mine enemy say, I have prevailed against him; and those that trouble me rejoice when I am moved.

REFLECTIONS UPON PSALM X.—What a heavy burden to an exercised saint are the hidings and frowns of his God! and the greatest saints undergo the severest trials of their faith. Men's persecutions, or Satan's temptations, often unite with God's absence to distress the soul. Behold into what dreadful monsters sin has transformed men—proud—persecutors—boasters—covetous—prayerless—careless of God and religion—disobedient—impenitent—insolent—secure—profane—treacherous—heretical—murderous—hypocritical—blasphemous! But their wickedness is all before the Lord. And to revenge their affronting of himself, to honour his people's relation to, dependence on, and expectations from him, and to manifest his wonted readiness to appear in their behalf, he will quickly arise to punish them. And when God breaks the power, and in awful vengeance manifests the wickedness of their enemies, he deals kindly with his people. When the wicked are cast down, they are lifted up to safety, holiness, and honour. And he usually pours out upon them a remarkable spirit of humility, and of earnest supplication, as the mean of ushering in their deliverance.

EXPLANATORY NOTES. PSALM XI. Ver. 3.—If the foundations be destroyed, i. e. if all regard to the laws of God, all regard to order and justice, be gone, what safety can the most innocent or virtuous expect! 6. Snares, fire, and brimstone, &c. signify all the terrible and unavoidable judgments which God executes upon the wicked, in time and eternity; such as he executed upon Saul and his agents.

REFLECTIONS UPON PSALM XI.—The saints' sorest temptations come as often from carnal friends as from their inveterate enemies: and often the most upright and blameless meet with the greatest malignity on earth. When wicked rulers have once unhinged the fundamental laws of equity, the greatest virtue often exposes men to the greatest danger. But while God is in Christ, in the church, and in heaven, they who trust in him need never despair. Nothing escapes his notice, and nothing shall escape, without a due reward. While in his afflicting the righteous he but tries them for their purification and honour, the holiness and equity of his nature demand that his unavoidable judgments should in a terrible manner destroy the wicked.

REFLECTIONS UPON PSALM XII.—It is fearfully ominous when those distinguished saints, who support nations or churches, are removed by death, while none are raised up to fill their room. Perilous are the times, when piety towards God, and integrity towards men, cease—when all men seek their own, not the things of Jesus Christ—when hypocrites by fair speeches deceive the simple! But pride must have a fall, either before the throne of grace, or into the depths of hell! And though God for a time may seemingly overlook his people, he will never forget, disregard, or cast them off. He best knows when to deliver; and if we have but faith, he will never fail. When the saints' night of trouble is at the darkest, and their prayer fervent, their deliverance is near. While God's pure and precious promises stand fast in Christ, no increase, activity, or malice of wicked men shall ever be able utterly to destroy or deceive his people.

REFLECTIONS UPON PSALM XIII.—How painful, to an exercised believer, is the sense of God's absence and frowns! An hour is an age without his love! But the most precious saints are often exercised with long and constant sorrows: and their anxiety and vain contrivances to help themselves will but add to their burden, entangle them more and more, and bring them to the brink of despair. But though God hide, and frown, and smite, his new covenant relation cannot be broken. Let Satan and his agents triumph as they may in their fall, there is full hope of their recovery; nay, it is at hand. Trust in God's mercy, and prayers poured into his bosom will quickly issue in great deliverance and joy.

REFLECTIONS UPON PSALM XIV.—How desperately wicked are human hearts! If all their thoughts were manifested, how horrible and shameful the sight! Atheism in heart is the source of all our corruption in life! Men are very similar in sin, particularly in inward corruption. And there is great reason to bless God for the riches of his grace, if anything good is implanted in us by his Spirit. How absurdly, and against conscience, must men act when they eat up, with pleasure hate, reproach, persecute, and oppress the people of God, or neglect prayer to him! Or when they attempt to shame and banter poor saints out of their religion, and dependence on him! But if God be for us, who can be against us. Secret terrors shall apprehend our most jovial persecutors. How fervent are right desires for salvation through Christ; and how ravishing our enjoyment of it! For now is come Jesus, and his salvation and strength! Let Jews and Gentiles magnify the Lord, and rejoice in God their Saviour.

REFLECTIONS UPON PSALM XV.—Professors of religion have great need to examine themselves. Many have a place in God's church below who will never be admitted into his holy heaven. And if we would know our true state, God's word must be the sole standard, and his Spirit the great director and manager of our trial. It is not fair words, nor high pretences, but uniform obedience in heart and life to God's law, that will prove the reality of our grace. We must exercise ourselves to keep a conscience void of offence towards God and man; to keep good company; and to have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness, but rather to reprove them. Though our holiness and virtue be not the foundation of our unchangeable happiness, they are the marks of our being rooted and grounded in Christ, our infallible establisher.

PSALM XVI.—Ver. 5. The Lord and his fulness, answerable to every need, every desire, is represented as a lot or portion, in allusion to the shares of Canaan, which were divided by lot, Num. xxiv.; and to the shares of liquor in cups at feasts; importing how permanent, unalterable, refreshing, and strengthening, he is to the enjoyers. 10. Hell, with respect to David or Christ, cannot signify the place of the damned; for thither they never went: but it may include great distress of spirit, the grave, and the state of the dead.

REFLECTIONS UPON PSALM XVI.—Trust in God does not merit, but it secures, divine preservation, as God cannot disappoint one who believes his word, or rests on his new covenant characters. Our holiness cannot profit God, but it marks us his, and tends to our advantage; and next to fellowship with God, that with ourselves is the most excellent and useful. But the more a believer advances in holiness, the more humble thoughts he will have of himself, in view of the pure and all-sufficient JEHOVAH. They who delight in God will delight in those who bear his image, as the most excellent on earth. Such as have Jesus Christ as their atonement, and God in him, need no idols or other sacrifices. And if we want to banish idolatry, the most distant appearances of it ought to be avoided and abhorred. But happy are they who have God as their portion, their wealth and comfort, by his own gospel grant! This secures against want, as well as against ruin. This secures direction in time, comfort in death, and glory through eternity. And O how pleasant death and eternity appear, when Christ is considered as our way, as our forerunner, and God in him as our everlasting ALL in ALL.

¶ A PRAYER OF DAVID.

A. M. cir. 2946.
B. C. cir. 1058.

HEAR [a] [*] the right, [†] O LORD, [b] attend unto my cry, give ear unto my prayer, that goeth [‡] not out of feigned lips.

2 [c] Let my sentence come forth from thy presence; let thine eyes behold the things that are equal.

3 [d] Thou hast proved mine heart; thou hast visited me in the night; thou hast tried me, and shalt find nothing: [§] I [e] am purposed that my mouth shall not transgress.

4 Concerning the works of men, [f] by the word of thy lips I have kept me from the paths of the destroyer. [‖]

5 [g] Hold up my goings in thy paths, that my footsteps [*] slip not.

6 I [h] have called upon thee; for thou wilt hear me, O God: incline thine ear unto me, and hear my speech.

7 Show thy [‖] marvellous loving-kindness, O thou [†] that savest by thy right hand them which put their trust in thee from those that rise up against them. [‖]

8 Keep me as the apple of the eye, hide me under [k] the shadow of thy wings,

9 From the wicked [‡] that oppress me, from [§] my deadly enemies, who compass me about.

10 [‖] They are enclosed in their own fat: with their mouth they speak proudly.

11 [m] They have now compassed us in our steps: they have set their eyes bowing down to the earth;

12 [‖] Like as a lion that is greedy of his prey, and as it were a young lion [*] lurking in secret places.

13 Arise, O LORD; [†] disappoint him, cast him down: [‡] deliver my soul from the wicked, [§] which is thy sword;

14 [‖] From men which are thy hand, O LORD, from men of the world, which have their portion in this life, and whose belly thou fillest with thy hid treasure: [*] they are full of children, and leave the rest of their substance to their babes.

15 As for me, [n] I will behold thy face in righteousness: I shall be [o] satisfied, when I awake, with thy [p] likeness.

¶ TO THE CHIEF MUSICIAN, [a] A PSALM OF DAVID [b] THE SERVANT OF THE LORD, WHO SPAKE UNTO THE LORD THE WORDS OF THIS SONG, IN THE DAY THAT [c] THE LORD DELIVERED HIM FROM THE HAND OF ALL HIS ENEMIES, AND FROM THE HAND OF SAUL: AND HE SAID,

I [d] WILL love thee, O LORD, my strength.

2 The LORD is my [e] rock, and my fortress, and my [f] deliverer; [g] my God, [*] my strength, in whom I will trust; my [h] buckler, and [i] the horn of my salvation, and my [k] high tower.

3 [‖] I will call upon the LORD, who is worthy to be praised: so shall I be saved from mine enemies. [†]

4 The sorrows of death compassed me, and the floods of [‡] ungodly men made me afraid.

5 The [§] sorrows of hell compassed me about; the [‖] snares of death prevented me.

6 In my distress I called upon the LORD, and cried unto my God: he heard my voice out of his temple, and my cry came before him, even into his ears.

7 Then [n] the earth shook [‖] and trembled; the foundations also of the hills moved and were shaken, because he was wroth.

8 There went up a smoke [*] out of his nostrils, [†] and fire out of his mouth devoured: coals were kindled by it.

9 He [o] bowed the heavens also, and came down: and darkness [‡] was under his feet.

10 And [p] he rode upon a cherub, and did fly; yea, he did fly upon the wings of the wind.

11 [q] He made darkness his secret place; his pavilion round about him were dark waters and thick clouds of the skies.

12 At [r] the brightness that was before him his thick clouds passed, hail-stones and coals of fire.

13 [s] The LORD also thundered in the heavens, and the Highest gave his voice; hail-stones and coals of fire.

14 Yea, [t] he sent out his arrows, and scattered them; and he shot out lightnings, and discomfited them.

† Whose enemies? A somewhat similar Psalm is said to have been spoken by David on his deliverance from all his enemies, and from Saul; and the day was most appropriate for celebrating, not typically, but prophetically, the glorious deliverance of Messiah. For that David does not speak in his own person, is obvious, from comparing Rom. 15. 8. with ver. 49, and from considering the character the speaker gives of himself, ver. 20, 23, 24, a character that David could never appropriate to himself, but which, in every feature so perfectly accords with the character of the Christ.—ED.

PSALM XVII.—Ver. 1. Prayer is called meditation, because our requests ought to be seriously considered before we present them to God. It is called a lifting up of our souls, and pouring out of our hearts, because our requests must be the earnest desires of our soul. It is called supplication, seeking, knocking, inquiring, to denote the humility and earnestness of our petitions. It is represented as a crying, sighing, groaning, and breathing, to signify our great pressures and necessities, and the great earnestness of our desires after relief. It is represented as a looking to, talking with, and taking hold of God, to denote the humble familiarity, importunate earnestness, and patient resignation necessary therein. From the gestures used in it, it is represented as a bowing, kneeling, falling down, or standing before God; or and from its acceptableness to God, it is represented as odours incense.

REFLECTIONS UPON PSALM XVII.—Happy are they who, when traduced by men, have the testimony a good conscience to their uprightness before God: his Providence will manifest injured innocence at last! And happy are they who in all their trials improve God's word as their preservative from evil; and who, assisted by his gracious influence, watch over their heart, their tongue, their feet, cleaving to that which is good, and abhorring that which is evil! But not the strongest saint hath a fund of grace to support himself, without constant supplies, from Jesus Christ, our living fountain. And a deep sense of our own weakness and insufficiency, is the surest way to be strong in the Lord, and in the power of his might. Every saint walks in a slippery path, where many watch for his halting. He ought therefore always to watch, and pray that he faint not. Our whole salvation is of God, and is of infinite love from first to last. In vain Satan rages against those whom God so tenderly, closely, and kindly keeps. No luxurious, proud, active, crafty, or cruel devourers shall ever pluck them out of his hand. They are but God's sword and hand, by which he corrects his people, or manages, in his providence, as he pleases. And how wretched are they, amidst all their affluence and wealth, as it is their portion, ripening them for everlasting misery! But happy are they who through their much tribulation enter into the kingdom of God! Happy they whose transient views of God, and imperfect likeness to him, issue at last in endless and immediate vision of him, and in perfect conformity to his image!

15 [u] Then the channels of waters were seen, and the foundations of the world were discovered at thy rebuke, O LORD, at the blast of the breath of thy nostrils.*

16 [x] He sent from above, he took me, he drew me out of [y] many waters.

17 He [z] delivered me from my [†] strong enemy, and from them which hated me: for they were [a] too strong for me.

18 [b] They prevented me in the day of my calamity: but the LORD was my stay.

19 [c] He brought me forth also into a large place; he delivered me, because he delighted in me.

20 The LORD [d] rewarded me according to my righteousness; according to the cleanness of my hands hath he recompensed me.

21 For [e] I have kept the ways of the LORD, and have not wickedly departed from my God.

22 [f] For all his judgments were before me, and I did not put away his statutes from me.

23 I was also [g] upright [‡] before him; and I kept myself from [h] mine iniquity.[§]

24 [i] Therefore hath the LORD recompensed me according to my righteousness, according to the cleanness of my hands [‖] in his eyesight.*

25 [k] With the merciful thou wilt show thyself merciful; with an upright man thou wilt show thyself upright;

26 With* the pure thou wilt show thyself pure; [l] and with the froward thou wilt [†] show thyself froward.

27 [m] For thou wilt save the afflicted [‡] people; [n] but wilt bring down high looks.

28 [o] For thou wilt light my [§] candle: the LORD my God will enlighten my darkness.

29 [p] For by thee I have run through a troop; and by my God have I leaped over a wall.

30 As for God, [q] his way is perfect: [r] the word of the LORD is [‖] tried: [s] he is a buckler to all those that trust in him.

31 [t] For who is God save the LORD?* or who is a rock save our God?

32 [u] It is God that girdeth me with strength, and maketh my way perfect.

33 He maketh my feet like hinds' feet, and setteth me upon my high places.

34 He teacheth my hands to war, so that a bow of steel is broken by mine arms.

35 Thou hast also given me [x] the shield of thy salvation: and thy right hand hath holden me up, and [†] thy gentleness [y] hath made me great.

‡ That is to the children born of the Spirit, whom the Lord hath given him. Heb. 2. 13.—ED.

36 Thou hast [z] enlarged my steps under me, that * my feet did not slip.

37 [a] I have pursued mine enemies, and overtaken them; neither did I turn again till they were consumed.

38 I have wounded them, that they were not able to rise: they are fallen under my feet.

39 For thou [b] hast girded me with strength unto the battle: thou hast [†] subdued under me those that rose up against me.

40 Thou hast also given me [c] the necks of mine enemies;[‡] that I might destroy them that hate me.

41 [d] They cried, but there was none to save them; even unto the LORD, but he answered them not.[§]

42 Then did I [e] beat them small as the dust before the wind: I did cast them out as the dirt in the streets.

43 Thou hast delivered me from [f] the strivings of the people; [g] and thou hast made me the head of the heathen: a people whom I have not known shall serve me.

44 [i] As soon as they hear of me, they shall obey me: * the strangers shall [h] submit themselves unto me.

45 The strangers shall fade away, and [i] be afraid out of their close places.

46 The [k] LORD liveth; and [l] blessed be my rock; and let the God of my salvation be exalted.

47 It is God that [m] avengeth me, and [n] subdueth the people under me.

48 He delivereth me from mine enemies; [o] yea, thou liftest me up above those that rise up against me: thou hast delivered me from the [†] violent man.

49 [p] Therefore will I give thanks unto thee, O LORD, among the heathen, and sing praises unto thy name.

50 [q] Great deliverance giveth he to his [r] king; and showeth mercy to his [s] anointed, to David, and to his seed [‡] for evermore.

PSALM XIX.

(1) The teaching of the heavens: 1—6. (2) The excellence of the divine law: 7—11. (3) Prayer for grace and acceptance: 12—14.

¶ TO THE CHIEF MUSICIAN, A PSALM OF DAVID.

A. M. cir. 2964.
B. C. cir. 1040.

THE heavens declare the glory of God; and the firmament showeth his handy-work.

2 Day unto day uttereth speech, and night unto night showeth knowledge.*

3 There is no speech nor language where their voice is not heard.

* As the spiritual eye "seeth him that is invisible," (Mat. 11. 27.) so the spiritual ear heareth that which is inaudible. So says the dying believer, "I see a hand you cannot see, that beckons me away; I hear a voice you cannot hear, that says, I must not stay."—ED.

REFLECTIONS UPON PSALM XVIII.—How close and marvellous is the connexion between Christ and his people, that the same relations of God, the same words and works of God, and exercises towards God, will apply to both! Let Jesus then be at once my Saviour, my Forerunner, and my Pattern. Pleasant and profitable is God to the souls that find him. He is their ALL and IN ALL! Sure is their help in time of need who trust in and love him! though God may take the most awful manner to answer the prayers of his people in delivering them out of their distress, and exalting them to safety and joy. Those deliverances demand the most solemn and hearty thanksgivings, which are from great and imminent danger, and in exact answer to earnest prayers, and which are granted by wonderful appearances, in the midst of great difficulties, and have great and lasting good fruits. Happy are they who, interested in Jesus' righteousness, have their corruptions subdued by his grace, and are by his Spirit enabled to conquer every spiritual foe! God fights for them! who can be against them! What knowledge and skill—what strength—what activity—what courage—what protection—what success and victory—what a high throne—is allotted them by the living, the faithful, the powerful, and unparalleled God of their salvation! With firm faith may such expect the Lord's perfecting all that grace and glory which concerns them.

7 For the king trusteth in the LORD; and through the mercy of the most High he shall not be moved.

8 [f] Thine hand shall find out all thine enemies; thy right hand shall find out those that hate thee.[*]

9 Thou shalt make them as a fiery oven in the time of thine anger: the LORD shall swallow them up in his wrath, and the fire shall devour them.

10 Their fruit shalt thou destroy from the earth, and their seed from among the children of men.

11 For they intended evil against thee: they imagined a mischievous device,[†] which they are not able to perform.

12 Therefore [g] shalt thou make them turn their [‡] back, when thou shalt make ready thine arrows upon thy strings against the face of them.

13 Be thou exalted, LORD, in thine own strength: so will we sing and [h] praise thy power.

REFLECTIONS UPON PSALM XIX.—How inexcusable are atheists and idolaters, when the ever obvious heavens, the regular succession of nights and days, and the enlightening and warming sun, teach men so much of God! But much more they, who enjoy the heavens, the firmament of the gospel church, all illuminated by Jesus Christ the Sun of Righteousness, and his oracles, ordinances, and ministers, if they offend! Happy those hearts in which his word, so pure, so perfect, so true, so righteous, so precious and pleasant, is hid: and in which its enlightening, instructing, converting, comforting, nourishing, and healing influence is felt! The more we look into this blessed glass, the more cause we shall see of deep humiliation before God, on account of the number and strength of our secret corruptions. But terrible are presumptuous sins—sins done against light and love! and yet the best need to watch and pray against them. Great then is the mercy that all our salvation from sin, and all the acceptance of our holy services is in Christ the beloved, and his infinitely valuable righteousness.

REFLECTIONS UPON PSALM XX.—Neither piety nor power can exempt men from sore troubles. All then have need for prayer; and even the greatest need this assistance from the meanest. But what an almighty helper, a kind accepter, and a liberal bestower, is God in Christ as the God of his people! Such as make him the object of their trust shall soon have reason to make him the ground of their praise. An assured trust in him is the best way to preferment and establishment. They who renounce all their confidences, and persevere in prayer to him, shall abide in his love, and be assured of his protection.

REFLECTIONS UPON PSALM XXI.—Chiefly, my soul, behold here the everlasting honours, joys, happiness, and blissful influences of thy Redeemer! Behold how fixed is his kingdom and dignity in the infinite, everlasting, and unchangeable wisdom, power, mercy, equity, goodness, and truth of the Most High! Behold the inexpressible vengeance which kindles upon and destroys his Jewish—his heathen—his antichristian—and other incorrigible enemies!——But rejoice, my soul, in this God thy Saviour. Rejoice at the glory with which he is crowned—at the life granted to and lodged in him; and in his being made blessings for evermore to

¶ TO THE CHIEF MUSICIAN UPON * AIJELETH SHAHAR, A PSALM OF DAVID.

A. M. cir. 2983. B. C. cir. 1021.

MY [a]God, my God, why hast thou forsaken[†] me? why art thou so far[‡] from helping me, and from the words of my roaring?

2 O my God, I cry in the day-time, but thou hearest not; and in the night-season, and [§]am not silent.

3 But thou art holy, O thou that [b]inhabitest the praises[‖] of Israel.

4 Our fathers trusted in thee: they trusted, and thou didst deliver them.

5 They cried unto thee, and were delivered: they trusted in thee, and were not confounded.

6 But I am a worm,[*] and no man; a reproach of men, and despised of the people.

7 All they that see me laugh me to scorn: they shoot out the lip, they shake the head, saying,

8 [†]He trusted on the LORD that he would deliver him: let him deliver[‡] him, [§]seeing he delighted in him.

9 But thou art he that took me out of the womb: thou didst [‖]make me hope when I was upon my mother's breasts.

10 I was cast upon thee from the womb: thou art my God from my mother's belly.

11 Be not far from me; for trouble is near; for there is [c]none to help.

12 Many bulls[*] have compassed me: strong bulls of Bashan have beset me round.

13 They[†] gaped upon me with their mouths,[‡] as a ravening and a roaring lion.

14 I am poured out like water, and all my bones are [§]out of joint: my heart is like wax; it is melted in the midst of my bowels.

15 My strength is dried up like a potsherd; and my tongue cleaveth to my jaws; [‖]and [d]thou hast brought me into the dust of death.

16 For dogs have compassed me: the assembly of the wicked have inclosed me: they pierced my hands and my feet.

17 [e]I may tell all my bones: [f]they look and stare upon me.

18 They part my garments among them, and cast lots upon my vesture.

MEN—blessings for evermore to ME! And let the ruinous overthrow of his Jewish, or other enemies, make me to stand in awe of provoking him, by presumptuous refusals of him, or by rebellion against him. Rich is that salvation purchased by him—honourable and lasting in its benefits! God gives exceedingly above what we can ask or think! Crowns, and all other enjoyments, are God's gifts to men! All affliction or destruction of persons or nations is the work of God's hand, and the reward of their sin. And the ruin of the wicked, particularly of the despisers of Jesus Christ, contributes to the salvation and joy of his people.

REFLECTIONS UPON PSALM XXII.—How fearful is the nature of sin, which drew such tremendous desertion and wrath upon God's only begotten Son, when it was but imputed to him! With the most holy resignation ought God's hidings and frowns to be endured, when they are sanctified by Jesus Christ's bearing them as our forerunner; and should be attended with kind thoughts of God, trust in him, and fervent prayers for deliverance. What earnest supplications are occasioned by a deep sense of need! But it is happy, in great distress, to have our covenant-relation to God, and our own and other's experience of former deliverances, to encourage us to hope and wait for what we now need. What sinners before the Lord exceedingly were these dogs, these bulls, these wicked men, who with devils thus raged against the great God our Saviour! But, oh! what a debt of love and of praise the redeemed owe to their Lord, who so bare their sins, their griefs! And what ought they not cheerfully to suffer for his sake! What tidings—what supplies—what conquests—what continuance—what glories of grace—issue from the sufferings of our great IMMANUEL! Himself opens the triumphant song, and exhibits his experience for the comfort of his distressed brethren; and with joy declares his adherence to all his covenant engagements. Sweet is the entertainment of his flesh and blood—yea, of all the fulness of God, which he has prepared for the poor, the afflicted, and meek! Precious and lasting is their life who by faith feed upon him! He goes forth conquering the nations, high and low, to the obedience of faith. Let then his cause be oppressed as it may, in every age it will prove triumphant.

REFLECTIONS UPON PSALM XXIII.—O the advantages, the pleasures, of experimental godliness! God, whose knowledge and care are infinite—God, who is ALL and giveth all—is his people's Shepherd! What can they then want, when all the fulness of God is opened for their supply! He makes them to rest and feed in the pastures of his ordinances and promises; and leads them, for their refreshment, to the still waters of his gospel truth, gracious influence, redeeming blood, and everlasting love. He restores their souls when under disease or decay, and, moved by his own sovereign grace, leads them in Jesus and his word as their way, and enables them to perfect holiness in his fear. Amidst all the pains and the fears of death, his gracious presence, his drawing and sealing influence, and his supporting promises, are their sufficient encouragement. Amidst their unnumbered enemies of lusts, of devils, and of men, not only necessaries, but even abundant comforts are allowed them. The mercy and goodness of God, in streams of spiritual and temporal blessings, inseparably attend them, till at last they are for ever filled with all the fulness of God in his heavenly temple.

REFLECTIONS UPON PSALM XXIV.—How great is Christ, who is Lord of all! Surely it is proper that all persons should praise and serve him; and that all things should be received as from his hand, and used to his honour. But what change of state and nature—what holiness in heart and life—is necessary to constitute us true members of his church on earth, or inhabitants of his heaven above! There is great need of serious self-examination, lest he at last reject us; for without holiness no man shall see the Lord. But however sincere our hearts, blameless our lives, or fervent our prayers, not these, but Jesus' righteousness and Jehovah's grace, must found our title to eternal felicity. O how transcendently glorious is Jesus' entrance into manhood—his exaltation to heaven—and his entrance into his people's hearts and assemblies on earth! And, in fine, his solemn return to his celestial mansions, attended by all his ransomed millions, after the last judgment!

REFLECTIONS UPON PSALM XXV.—An interest in God and his love is the surest protection from shame and danger; and the more our hearts and desires are weaned from earthly vanities, and set upon God and things above, we are the more sure that our hopes shall not be disappointed. He that believeth shall not be ashamed. God never fails them that seek him. But the short-lived triumphs of obstinate transgressors shall issue in everlasting misery and confusion. When we pray for ourselves, we must never forget our brethren. Being by nature blind and impotent, our whole direction in, and strength for, duty must come from God. And none who wait on him, as the God of their salvation, shall ever wait in vain. Hopes fixed on his everlasting love can never be disappointed: and what others have found an infallible support we may boldly depend upon. Sins of youth, though pardoned by God, ought to be remembered by us for our humiliation. And our only hope of God's favour must be founded on his free grace through Jesus' blood. All true knowledge of God and his ways, and wisdom to walk

PSALM XXVI.

A prayer for righteous judgment.

¶ A PSALM OF DAVID.

A. M. cir. 2948.
B. C. cir. 1056.

JUDGE me, O LORD; for I have walked in mine integrity:* I have trusted also in the LORD; therefore I shall not slide.

2 Examine me, O LORD, and prove me; try my reins and my heart.

3 For thy loving-kindness is before mine eyes; and I have walked in thy truth.†

4 I have not sat with vain persons, neither will I go in with dissemblers.

5 I have hated the congregation of evil-doers; and will not sit with the wicked.

6 I will wash mine hands in innocency:‡ so will I compass thine altar, O LORD;

7 That I may publish with the voice of thanksgiving, and tell of all thy wondrous works.

8 LORD, I have loved the habitation of thy house, and the place § where thine honour dwelleth.

9 [a] Gather not my soul with sinners, nor my life with bloody men;

10 In whose hands is mischief, and their right hand is [‖] full of bribes.

11 But as for me, I will walk in mine integrity:* redeem† me, and be merciful unto me.

12 My foot standeth in an even place: in the congregations will I bless the LORD.

* No conscious sinner ever called for judgment, but for mercy; none ever asserted integrity, being guilty of sin. This is therefore a prayer of Christ, who, though he bore our sins, knew no sin; and who, on behalf of his redeemed members, pleads his perfect righteousness.—ED.

† Who can boldly say unto God, I have walked in thy truth—not merely man's truth, but God's truth? Adam did not so walk; Eve did not so walk; Aaron did not so walk; David did not so walk; the apostles did not so walk: all these, as their histories testify, came short of the glory of God. Christ alone so walked, he alone could so affirm.—Note. How blessed are believers, to whom the promises of mercy, pardon, and salvation, are all confirmed by him who is the truth.—ED.

‡ Surely no mere man since the fall, could, or did, ever say in truth, I will wash mine hands in innocency! Is not he who so affirms, undoubtedly, the Christ?—ED.

§ Heb. of the tabernacle of thy honour.

a Or, take not away. Ps. 28. 3. & 55. 23. 1 Sam. 25. 29. Gen. 18. 23. Is. 3. 11.

PSALM XXVII.

A psalm of fearless confidence in God.

¶ A PSALM OF DAVID.

A. M. cir. 2984.
B. C. cir. 1020.

THE LORD is [a] my light and my salvation; whom shall I fear?* the LORD is the strength of my life; of whom shall I be afraid?

2 When the wicked, even mine enemies and my foes, † came upon me [b] to eat up my flesh, they stumbled and fell.

3 [c] Though an host should encamp against me, my heart shall not fear: though war should rise against me, in this will I be confident.

4 One thing have I desired of the LORD, that will I seek after; that I may dwell in the house of the LORD all the days of my life, to behold * the beauty of the LORD, and to inquire in his temple.

5 For in the time of trouble he shall hide me in his pavilion:† in the secret of his tabernacle shall he hide me; he shall set me up [d] upon a rock.

6 And now shall mine head be lifted up above mine enemies round about me: therefore will I offer in his tabernacle sacrifices ‡ of joy; I will sing, yea, I will sing praises unto the LORD.§

7 * Hear, O LORD, when I cry with my voice: have mercy also upon me, and answer me.

8 ‖ When thou saidst, Seek ye my face; my heart said unto thee, Thy face, LORD, will I seek.

9 Hide not thy face far from me; put not thy servant away in anger: thou hast been my help; [f] leave me not, neither forsake me, O God of my salvation.

10 When my father and my mother forsake me,* then the LORD † will take me up.

11 Teach me thy way, O LORD, and lead me in ‡ a plain path, because of § mine enemies.

12 Deliver me not over unto the will of mine enemies: [g] for false witnesses are risen up against me, ‖ and such as breathe out cruelty.

13 I had fainted, [h] unless I had believed to see the goodness of the LORD in the land of the living.

14 Wait on the LORD: be of good courage, and he shall strengthen thine heart: wait, I say, on the LORD.*

a Or, the delight.

† David never escaped from trouble; but Christ is gone into the heavens, waiting till all his enemies be made his footstool.—ED.

* It is not to be overlooked that, after the commencement of our Lord's ministry, Joseph his reputed father, is not mentioned, being most probably dead; and, when his mother and brethren endeavour to approach him, (Mat. 12. 46. Mark 3. 32—35. Luke 8. 19—21.) he defines his nearest and dearest relatives to be "those who hear the word of God, and do it." Now that literally, and also in this spiritual sense, Christ was forsaken of all earthly relations, is evident from the history of his malicious trial and barbarous crucifixion. Mat. 26. 56. therein, spring from his own mercy and faithfulness. Sense of sin must drive us to implore the forgiveness and destruction of it: but no sin, however great, ought to render us desperate. God, by his infinite power and grace, can pardon the greatest, as well as the least. And the more sin God forgives to us, the more we are obliged to love, fear, and serve him: and the more we serve him, the greater shall be our happiness in life, and intimacy with him. Whatever God does, however afflicting, shall work together for our good. Though God and men should concur to entangle us in nets of trouble, and Satan distress our minds with his accusations, the fruit of all is not to destroy us, but to purge away our sin. But our kindliest resignation to afflictions must be attended with prayer for the removal of them. Though we must love our enemies, we must pray against their wickedness. And while we earnestly study the utmost uprightness in our practice, the church in general, and every member thereof, ought to share in our fervent requests.

REFLECTIONS UPON PSALM XXVI.—While here we behold Jesus Christ, in a figure, as holy, harmless, undefiled, and separated from sinners, and wash our heart and hands in his blood and grace, let us observe how comfortable, under calumny, it is to possess conscious innocence. They who trust in God, are kept by his mighty power through faith unto salvation; and the faith or sense of Jesus' love, and a due regard to his word, will effectually restrain from sin. But nothing is more dangerous to souls than fellowship with the ungodly. To sit long amidst light, vain, and unprofitable discourse, perhaps more deadens the heart than that which is notoriously profane. No man appears really gracious who does not study to avoid the company of the wicked. No man rightly approaches God's ordinances but in the way of washing his heart and life in the sin-expiating and subduing fountain of Jesus' blood and Spirit. None can love God without loving his ordinances, and counting his service perfect freedom, and his works of grace inexpressibly marvellous.—However joyous the assemblies of sinners may be now, it will be infinitely dreadful to be gathered with them in death, or in the last judgment. And even those, who walk in their uprightness, must before God stand on the foundation of Jesus' redeeming blood and infinite mercy; and all their steadfastness in Christ, or his way, must be thankfully ascribed to their God.

REFLECTIONS UPON PSALM XXVII.—Happy are they to whom Jesus Christ is an effectual instructor, Saviour, strengthener, and quickener! He is at once the source, the price, the means, the matter, and the bestower of all our spiritual and eternal blessings. Where faith in him, through his word, keeps strong and steady, no enemies or dangers can make us either to fear or faint. To live near him, and to behold his and his Father's glory, in ordinances here, and in heaven above, is the pleasure, the protection, the honour of a saint, and the matter of his thankful praise. Nothing can be dearer to his heart than divine encouragements to intimate and gracious fellowship with God. A sense of his favour is the greatest help and comfort under manifold troubles and wants. His instructions direct to safe and honourable walking amidst the most malignant enemies. And though all men should forsake us, or even hate us, it is enough if he love and support us. Faith in his promises and characters will keep us from fainting amidst raging lusts, powerful temptations and distresses, and enemies unnumbered. And the more of his goodness we experience in waiting for him, the more we should encourage others to patient expectations of his grace.

2 [d] Hear the voice of my supplications, when I cry unto thee,* when I lift up my hands ‖toward thy holy oracle.

3 Draw me not away with the wicked, and with the workers of iniquity, which speak peace to their neighbours, but mischief is in their hearts.

4 Give them according to their deeds,‡ and according to the wickedness of their endeavours: give them after the work of their hands; render to them their desert.

5 Because they regard not the works of the LORD, nor the operation of his hands,§ he shall destroy them, and not build them up.

6 [e] Blessed be the LORD, because he hath heard the voice of my supplications.

7 The LORD is my strength and my shield; my heart trusted in him, and I am helped: therefore my heart greatly rejoiceth; and with my song will I praise him.

8 The LORD is ‖their strength,* and he is the †saving strength of his anointed.

9 Save thy people, and bless thine inheritance: ‡feed them also, and lift them up for ever.

PSALM XXIX.

The glory of the voice of the Lord.

¶ A PSALM OF DAVID.

GIVE unto the LORD, O *ye mighty, give unto the LORD glory and strength.

2 Give unto the LORD [a] the glory due unto his name: † worship the LORD ‡in the beauty of holiness.§

3 The voice‖ of the LORD is upon the waters: the God of glory thundereth: the LORD is upon * many waters.

4 The voice of the LORD is †powerful; the voice of the LORD is ‡full of majesty.

5 The voice of the LORD breaketh the cedars; yea, the LORD breaketh the cedars of Lebanon.

6 He maketh them also to skip like a calf; Lebanon and Sirion like a young unicorn.

7 The voice of the LORD §divideth the flames of fire.

8 The voice of the LORD shaketh the wilderness; the LORD shaketh the wilderness of Kadesh.

9 The voice of the LORD maketh the hinds to calve, and discovereth the forests;* and in his temple doth every one speak of his glory.†

10 The LORD sitteth upon the flood; yea, the LORD sitteth King for ever.

11 The LORD will give strength unto his people; the LORD will bless his people with peace.

PSALM XXX.

Praise to God for deliverance.

¶ A PSALM AND SONG AT THE [a] DEDICATION OF THE HOUSE OF DAVID.

I [b] WILL extol thee, O LORD; for thou hast lifted me up, and hast not made my foes to rejoice over me.

2 [c] O LORD my God, I cried unto thee, and thou hast healed me.

3 [d] O LORD, thou hast brought up my soul from the grave;* thou hast kept me alive, that I should not go down to the pit.

4 [e] Sing unto the LORD, O ye saints of his, and give thanks †at the remembrance of his holiness.

5 For ‡his anger endureth but a moment; in his favour is life: weeping may endure §for a night, but ‖joy cometh in the morning.*

6 [f] And in my prosperity I said, I shall never be moved.

7 LORD, by thy favour thou hast †made my mountain to stand strong: thou didst hide thy face, and I was troubled.‡

8 §I cried to thee, O LORD; and unto the LORD I made supplication.

9 [h] What profit is there in my blood, when I go down to the pit? shall the dust praise thee? shall it declare thy truth?

10 ‖Hear, O LORD, and have mercy upon me: LORD, be thou my helper.

* The construction of these prayers, which are all in the speaker's own name, sufficiently testify to him who knows the scriptures. (Job 14. 13—16. & 16. 23. 25.) that this is a Psalm, not of a sinner, asking in Christ's name, but of Christ asking in his own right.—Ed.

‡ Such prayers throughout the Psalms have often afforded matter of scorn or reproach to the infidel, and called forth timid and ignorant apologies from believers. REFLECTIONS UPON PSALM XXVIII.—Deep distress should awaken strong cries to God. Not the Jewish holy of holies, but Christ is our oracle, in which dwells all the fulness of the Godhead bodily; and through him our prayers are sure to speed. What a burden to exercised saints are sin and sinners while they live in this world! Seducing sinners are always busy; and they who would avoid their ruin must shun their ways. But great are the thankful praises which saints owe to their God for the mercies which have been granted in answer to their prayer, and which faith assures them he will grant. And what almighty power and grace, Jesus Christ, and every one of his true members, have engaged on their side to prevent their miscarriage! Clusters of well-connected and everlasting blessings are secured by God for his people. And great should be the joy they have in, and care for, one another's spiritual and eternal welfare.

REFLECTIONS UPON PSALM XXIX.—Alas! how shameful it is that we should need repeated calls to the solemn worship and service of God; and that great men are but seldom shining examples of devotion! Formal ceremony of words is too often the whole of our worship, which is neither performed in Jesus' holy name, nor in beautiful holiness of heart. But infinitely great is the glory of JEHOVAH! His voice in thunder, in stormy tempests, is not more awful and effective than his voice in his word is on my heart, and hath been, or shall be, in the gospel church. There he speaks to multitudes, numerous as the waters; he awakens, convinces, and converts the sinner; humbles the proud, and draws the obstinate, fast rooted as the mountains; darts light and love into their heart, and brings forth many sons and daughters to glory, for the advancement of his own honour. He strengthens them against every danger and enemy, and blesses them with that peace which passeth all understanding.

REFLECTIONS UPON PSALM XXX.—To what plagues and sickness the best of saints are by sin obnoxious in this world! But the prayer of faith is always availing under every trouble. And there is great ground of praise and thanksgiving in every deliverance which comes through Jesus Christ. How delightful to saints is God's infinite and sanctifying holiness! His favours are greatly beneficial: and short-lived, but preciously fruitful, are his frowns, and his people's griefs. Fellowship with him on earth, and chiefly in heaven, turns their mourning into joys unspeakable and full of glory. Outward prosperity, or even ravishing frames of spiritual joy, quickly occasion security and pride; and become means of casting us down into the depths of desertion and trouble. There is great need then to be always humble and watchful amidst smiles of Providence and to believe and pray amidst depths of distress. And it is not our own advantages, but the services we can render to God on earth, that should make us desire to live! Quickly God changes the lot and frame of his people, and fills their lips with his praise. And it is delightful when high songs of redeeming love are remarkably begun on earth.

PSALM XXXI.

(1) Joy and confidence in God: 1—8. (2) A prayer in calamity: 9—18. (3) God's goodness extolled: 19—24.

¶ TO THE CHIEF MUSICIAN, A PSALM OF DAVID.

IN [a] thee, O LORD, do I put my trust; let me never be ashamed: deliver me in thy righteousness.

2 Bow down thine ear to me; deliver me speedily: be thou [*] my strong rock, for an house of defence to save me.

3 For thou art my rock and my fortress; therefore for thy name's sake, lead me, and guide me.

4 Pull me out of the net that they have laid privily for me: for thou art my strength.

5 [b] Into thine hand I commit my spirit: [†] thou hast redeemed [‡] me, O LORD God of truth.

6 I have hated [§] them that regard lying vanities: but I trust in the LORD.

7 I will be glad and rejoice in thy mercy: for thou hast considered my trouble; thou hast known my soul in adversities;

8 [c] And hast not shut me up into the hand of the enemy: thou hast set my feet in a large room.

9 Have mercy upon me, O LORD, for I am in trouble: mine eye is consumed with grief, yea, my soul and my belly.

10 For my life is spent with grief, and my years with sighing: [‖] my strength faileth because of mine iniquity, [*] and my bones are consumed.

11 I was a reproach among all mine enemies, but especially among my neighbours, and a fear to mine acquaintance: they that did see me without fled from me. [†]

12 [d] I am forgotten as a dead man out of mind; I am like [‡] a broken vessel.

13 For I have heard the slander of many: fear was on every side: while they took counsel together against me, they devised to take away my life. [§]

14 But I trusted in thee, O LORD: I said, Thou art my God.

15 My times [‖] are in thy hand: [*] deliver me from the hand of mine enemies, and from them that persecute me.

16 Make thy face to shine upon thy servant: save me for thy mercies' sake.

17 Let me not be ashamed, [*] O LORD; for I have called upon thee: let the wicked be ashamed, and [†] let them be silent in the grave.

PSALM XXXII.

The blessedness of having sin forgiven.

¶ A PSALM OF DAVID, MASCHIL.

BLESSED is he whose transgression is forgiven, whose sin is covered.

2 Blessed is the man unto whom the LORD imputeth not iniquity, and in whose spirit there is no guile. [*]

3 When I kept silence, my bones waxed old through my roaring all the day long.

4 For day and night thy hand was heavy upon me: my moisture is turned into the drought of summer. Selah.

5 I acknowledged my sin unto thee, and mine iniquity have I not hid. I said, I will confess my transgressions unto the LORD; and thou forgavest the iniquity of my sin. [†] Selah.

6 For this shall every one that is godly pray unto thee [‡] in a time when thou mayest be found: surely in the floods of great waters they shall not come nigh unto him.

7 Thou art my hiding-place; thou shalt preserve me from trouble; thou shalt compass me about with songs of deliverance. Selah. [§]

8 I will instruct thee, [‖] and teach thee in the way which thou shalt go: I will guide thee with mine eye.

9 Be ye not as the horse, or as the mule,

REFLECTIONS UPON PSALM XXXI.—Trust in God never issues in confounding disappointments. Both Jesus and JEHOVAH'S righteousness secures to believing supplicants a speedy deliverance out of every trouble and snare; and fervent prayers in Jesus' name ensure a quick and comfortable answer. The more we commit ourselves to God, the more we shall experience of his faithfulness in performing his promises: and the more we know of his redeeming power and grace, and of his faithfulness, the more fully we shall commit ourselves to his care in life or in death. When God is our portion, we may renounce everything else as lying vanities. And his unceasing mercies, his sympathy under trouble, his protection from evils, and his increase of blessings, deserve our constant returns of praise. But though the sins of saints cannot damn them, yet they often severely distress them on earth. And through much conformity to Christ, in the enduring of hatred, reproach, and persecution, they must enter into the celestial kingdom of God. The wicked often abandon themselves to the most false and virulent reproach against Jesus Christ and his people: but distress, death, and judgment, will quickly silence them. Meanwhile, God's present protection of his people, and the unbounded happiness of heaven, are comforts more than sufficient for the saints to balance all their troubles on earth. Often his great and unexpected mercies shame their unbelief, and rebuke their carnal fear. And O what reason the best have to bewail their repeated and deep despondencies under trouble, and to encourage others to avoid them! For, when we consider our God and his mercies, alas! how cold is our love, how weak our faith, and languid our hopes.

REFLECTIONS UPON PSALM XXXII.—Dreadful is the nature of sin! It, and nothing else, renders us miserable. But rich is the grace of God, and efficacious the merit of Jesus' blood, which freely removes it. And justification through his imputed righteousness effectually promotes integrity and holiness of heart and life! But the remains of sin must be purged out by sore troubles and wounding convictions. For there is a close connexion between gospel repentance and pardon of sin. It is not, however, our repentance, but God's mercy in Christ as the atonement, that is the cause of our pardon. Hopeful is a sinner's case when he is once brought to humble applications to a gracious God, who is more ready to pardon than we are to pray for it. They who seek him, even in trouble, shall surely find him; the more imminently terrible their danger, the more shall his grace and love be magnified in their salvation. And it is no small encouragement to their seeking of God in their distress, that others, like themselves, have found mercy in like cases. But great is the protection, preservation, deliverance, instruction, and direction, which God bestows upon his pardoned ones, while the impenitent are loaded with sorrows everlasting and unnumbered. It is necessary then to receive his instructions, and to bend before his warnings, that we may rejoice in his mercy, and triumph in his praise.

REFLECTIONS UPON PSALM XXXIII.—How great, glorious, and good, is our God! and as extensive is the matter, and reasonable the exercise of our praise. All that God is in himself; all that he hath declared in his word; all that he hath done in his works, is the matter of his gift, and subject of our songs. Thrice happy are his peculiar people, to whom he is their Portion, their kind Observer, their powerful Protector, their Almighty deliverer, their gracious Provider, and constant Preserver! The thoughts of his universal power, influence, and operations, and the vanity of all things beside him, should effectually engage us to contented resignation of ourselves, and all that we have, into his hand.

¶ A PSALM OF DAVID.

[a]PLEAD my cause, O LORD, with them that strive with me; fight against them that fight against me.[*]

2 [†]Take hold of shield and buckler, and stand up for mine help.

3 Draw out also the spear, and stop the way against them that persecute me: say unto my soul, I am thy salvation.

4 Let them be confounded and put to shame that seek after my soul: let them be turned back and brought to confusion that devise my hurt.

5 Let them be as chaff before the wind: and let the angel of the LORD chase them.

6 Let their way be [‡]dark and slippery: and let the angel of the LORD persecute them.

7 For without cause have they hid for me their net in a pit, which without cause they have digged for my soul.

8 Let destruction come upon him [§]at unawares; and let his net that he hath hid catch himself: into that very destruction let him fall.[‖]

9 And my soul shall be joyful in the LORD: it shall rejoice in his salvation.

10 [b]All my bones[*] shall say, LORD, who is like unto thee, which deliverest the poor from him that is too strong for him, yea, the poor and the needy from him that spoileth him?

REFLECTIONS UPON PSALM XXXIV.—Great is the sovereignty of God in smiling upon his people, when their folly richly deserves his fearful frowns! He can wonderfully change their heaviest loads of fear into shouts of praise: and certain and speedy are his gracious returns to the prayers of faith. None wait on him, None cry to him and are disappointed. What angelic guards protect, what unceasing provision is made for them that fear him! Though the most ravenous beasts, and covetous men, should be pinched and starved, none that fear him shall ever want, either for soul or body, what is for their good. It is a great mercy when children are from their infancy carefully instructed in the word and ways of God. And negligent parents and masters will have a heavy charge to answer in the day of God, if for lack of knowledge their children and servants eternally perish. How strictly are holiness and happiness connected! But marvellous is God's love to his people, in dwelling with them, delighting in them, hearing their requests, and in delivering, preserving, and redeeming them. And who can support under his indignation against the wicked! But let me not here forget his kindness to Jesus our Mediator, and the vengeance which he did, and will, take on his Jewish, heathen, antichristian, and other opposers.

REFLECTIONS UPON PSALM XXXV.—The best of men are often most cruelly persecuted. But a good God to plead their cause, and a good conscience to witness their integrity, are enough to comfort them. And a time is at hand when God will sufficiently recompense all the injuries done to them. However little

PSALM XXXVI.

(1) The heart of the wicked: 1—4. (2) The mercy, righteousness, and love of God: 5—10. (3) The downfall of the proud and evil-doers: 11, 12.

¶ TO THE CHIEF MUSICIAN, A PSALM OF DAVID THE SERVANT OF THE LORD.

A. M. cir. 2916. B. C. cir. 1088.

THE transgression of the wicked saith within my heart,* [a] that there is no fear of God before his eyes.

2 For he flattereth himself in his own eyes, [†] until his iniquity be found to be hateful.[‡]

3 The words of his mouth are iniquity and deceit: he hath left off to be wise, and to do good.

4 He deviseth [§] mischief upon his bed; he setteth himself in a way that is not good; [b] he abhorreth not evil.[‖]

5 Thy mercy, O LORD, is in the heavens; and thy faithfulness reacheth unto the clouds.

6 Thy righteousness is like [*] the great mountains; [†] thy judgments are a great deep: O LORD, thou preservest man and beast.

7 How [c] excellent is thy loving-kindness, O God! therefore the children of men put their trust under the shadow of thy wings.[‡]

8 They shall be abundantly [d] satisfied with the fatness of thy house; and thou shalt make them drink of the river of thy pleasures.

9 For with thee is the fountain of life: in thy light shall we see light.[§]

10 O [e] continue thy loving-kindness unto them that know thee; and thy righteousness to the upright in heart.

11 [f] Let not the foot of pride come against me, and let not the hand of the wicked remove me.[‖]

12 There* are the workers of iniquity fallen: they are cast down, and shall not be able to rise.

The judgment of the wicked, and the preservation of the righteous.

¶ A PSALM OF DAVID.

A. M. cir. 2989. B. C. cir. 1015.

FRET not thyself* because of evil-doers, neither be thou envious against the workers of iniquity.

2 For they shall soon be cut down like the grass, and wither as the green herb.

3 Trust in the LORD, and do good; so shalt thou dwell in the land, and verily thou shalt be fed.

4 Delight thyself also in the LORD; and he shall give thee the desires of thine heart.

6 And [b] he shall bring forth thy righteousness as the light, and thy judgment as the noon-day.

7 [c] Rest in the LORD, and wait patiently for him: fret not thyself because of him who prospereth in his way, because of the man [d] who bringeth wicked devices to pass.

8 [e] Cease from anger, and forsake wrath: fret not thyself in any wise to do evil.

9 [f] For evil-doers shall be cut off: but those that wait upon the LORD, they shall inherit the earth.[†]

10 [g] For yet a little while,[‡] and the wicked shall not be: yea, thou shalt diligently consider his place, and it shall not be.

20 But the wicked shall perish, and the enemies of the LORD shall be as [†] the fat of lambs:[‡] they shall consume; into smoke shall they consume away.

21 [q] The wicked borroweth, and payeth not again: but the righteous showeth mercy, and giveth.

persecutors see it, their feet stand on a slippery place, and a dreadful pit of ruin is just before them. And though we may not wish evil to our worst enemies, yet we may safely wish confusion to the implacable enemies of Christ and his church. Base ingratitude grievously wounds a generous spirit, when the greatest services meet with an ill requital. But let men use us as they will, it is our duty to pray for them. Though our kindness may be lost upon them, and our prayers slighted by them, they shall not return without a blessing to ourselves. And if we are made the reproach of the meanest, we but fill up what is behind of the sufferings of Christ.—But short-lived is the triumphing, fearful and lasting the misery, of those who are enemies to Christ and his people; while ravishing and lasting are the prosperity and joys of the godly in the kind delight and favour of their God! All our comforts come from his hand, through the righteousness of his Son; and therefore he ought to be praised on their account.

REFLECTIONS UPON PSALM XXXVI.—Living in open sin is a certain mark of an unregenerate heart. And how deceitful above all things, and desperately wicked, are the hearts of men by nature! What self-flattery—what abominable thoughts and devices—what false and mischievous words—what horrid deeds—proceed from them! Night and day they perpetrate crimes. And none are worse than apostate professors: their deliberate wickedness shows the power of the devil uncontrolled within them. And they, who, when awake on their beds, have their thoughts unoccupied in God's words, will find the devil at hand to suggest evil to them. But how high—how fixed—how unsearchable—are the excellencies of God! Unbounded is his mercy—unchangeable his veracity—conspicuous his justice—unsearchable his words—and awful his works! Benevolent and extensive is his providential care. Precious and engaging his love. And powerfully efficacious and delightful are the provision, the comfort, the life, the light, the love, the righteousness, which he bestows upon his people. But inevitable is the ruin, and intolerable the everlasting misery of their enemies.

* Good man.—"Good" is not in the original, and the Hebrew signifies, "a mighty man," even the mighty Lord, the King of glory, described Ps. 24. 8. the man Christ Jesus, who with "clean hands and a pure heart" ascends into the "hill of God," and abides in the "holy place" a Priest for ever. † Many have stumbled at this unlimited statement, for they have seen the children of believers reduced to want. But children are not mentioned, but seed—which signifies an entire race—a stream of life from the fountain of the righteous. Now, in this sense, the true sense, all experience verifies the statement. The Lazzaroni of Naples are a race of beggars; their birth, their heirship, their education, their inheritance, is begging. So are many of the hapless people called Gypsies. But, during all their dispersion and calamities, the Jews have never become a seed, a race of beggars; their employments, alas! are often low and ignoble, but still they are a race of workers, and as a seed they beg not. The same important fact is ever verified in the history of true Christians. There is not, there never was, there cannot be, a seed, a race, of Christian beggars. —ED.

REFLECTIONS UPON PSALM XXXVII.—Even eminent saints are apt to fret at the prosperity of the wicked—and yet how little reason is there for it! Be the apparent happiness of the wicked what it will in this world, it is mingled with the poisoning curse of God: it gives no solid satisfaction while it lasts, and it is quickly at an end. And never is their ruin nearer than when their prosperity spreads and flourishes like a green bay-tree. It ripens them for everlasting wrath, and fattens them as oxen for the slaughter of endless wo. But godliness hath great gain, having the promise of this life, and of that which is to come. If, rooted and grounded in Christ, we trust and delight in the Lord, and wait on him, in the faith of his promises and obedience to his laws, extensive and glorious shall be our inheritance, pleasure, support, honour, safety, plenty, protection, peace, happy death, and everlasting salvation.

REFLECTIONS UPON PSALM XXXVIII.—How tremendous is even God's fatherly wrath! But how much more his incensed vengeance against the ungodly? Sin makes fearful work even in saints. But much more terrible is its effects in the damned! Yea, where real grace is, sin will be more painful and bitter than all the arrows, strokes, and wounds of trouble. And however painful the wounds and groans of the soul are, they are symptoms of life. It is hopeful when outward

PSALM XXXIX.

Meditation on the brevity and vanity of human life.

¶ TO THE CHIEF MUSICIAN, EVEN TO JEDUTHUN, A PSALM OF DAVID.

I SAID, I will take heed to my ways, that I sin not with my tongue:* I will keep † my mouth with a bridle, while the wicked is before me.

2 I was dumb with silence;‡ I held my peace, even from good; and my sorrow was § stirred.

4 LORD, make me to know mine end, and the measure of my days, what it is;* that I may know † how frail I am.

5 Behold, thou hast made my days as an hand-breadth, and mine age is as nothing before thee: verily every man ‡ at his best state is altogether vanity. Selah.§

7 And now, LORD, what wait I for? [d] my hope is in thee.

8 *Deliver me from all my transgressions: ‖ make me not the reproach of the foolish.

9 [f] I was dumb,* I opened not my mouth; because thou didst it.

§ From Ex. 21. 6. it will appear that this expression signifies, "thou hast made me a servant for ever," an expression perfectly equivalent to that wondrous mystery revealed 1 Cor. 15. 28. Paul (Heb. 10. 5.) quotes from the septuagint translation, which gives an expository, not a literal translation.—ED.

‖ Instead of labouring to evade the inevitable conclusion, that these words were, in the Spirit, spoken by Christ, an attempt made by supposing the psalm should end at ver. 10, or by inserting afflictions, instead of iniquities, the peace of the believer rests in the very fact, that Christ, by imputation, and in virtue of his union of headship, made the believers' sins his own, and felt them, and confessed them, and died for them. See note on Psal. 32. 5. and Additional Editorial note on Psal. 25. 2.—ED.

† See notes on Psal. 5. 10. & 35. 8. Several high authorities endeavour to elude the apparent objection that lies against such prayers, by translating them prophetically, and not as imprecatory. The Greek translation, however, employed by the Spirit of truth, (Acts 1. 20.) sets the point at rest in favour of the authorized version.—ED.

distempers make men to search out and bewail their sinful causes. But nothing is a more fatal sign than insensibility. No human strength can withstand God's afflicting hand. No sinews of brass, nor bones of iron, can resist the strokes of fierce disease. And often our worldly friends, who flutter around us in our prosperity, treacherously forsake us in our adversity. But what a comfort it is that we have a compassionate God to trust to, who knows, and can cure our maladies! How many, how malicious and active, are the enemies of Christ and his saints! Their enmity at God himself, and his image, is the cause of their quarrel. So fixed is their hatred at godliness, that they abhor it, though benefited by it. It is hard, but wise, to imitate Jesus Christ in calm composure under severe provocation;—in silently suffering, and in overlooking manifold unkindness done to us. But to take notice of malicious and clamorous enemies is ordinarily to make evil worse. Hope in God will sufficiently support us against every oppression and injury. They who contentedly leave their cause with him, shall never be disappointed, nor want an advocate to plead for them; and the more sense we have of our offences against him, the greater will be our penitential grief, and our patience under the provocation of men. Our covenant-relation to him, as our Friend, Saviour, and God, improved by the prayer of faith, will quickly bring him to our relief.

REFLECTIONS UPON PSALM XXXIX.—Great watchfulness and circumspection are necessary to our walking aright in this wicked and ensnaring world. For careless hearts will make crooked ways; and next to the heart, nothing is harder to guide than the tongue: but the stronger the temptation is, the stronger ought to be our resolution against it. We are very apt to run from one extreme to another. If we restrain our lips from evil, we are ready to neglect that speech which is with grace seasoned with salt. And when our mind, long in silence, ruminates upon sorrows, and the instrumental causes of them, it galls its sores, and aggravates its discontent. But there is great need to consider what death is, and how near it is; and that it is continually working in us: for vain and transient are men, with all their joys and honours, their griefs and fears, their toils and cares. And the more we see death and vanity stamped upon all things here, the more we ought to be weaned from them in our affections, and the more solicitous should we be in securing the ever-living, the substantial, and eternal GOOD. PSALM XLII.

The afflicted soul seeking comfort in the living God.

A. M. cir. 2983. B. C. cir. 1021.

¶ TO THE CHIEF MUSICIAN, [a] MASCHIL, FOR THE SONS OF KORAH.

AS the hart [*] panteth after the water-brooks, so panteth my soul after thee, O God. [†]

2 My soul thirsteth for God, for the [b] living God: when shall I come and appear before God?

3 My tears have been my meat day and night, while they continually say unto me, Where is thy God?

4 When I remember these things, I pour out my soul in me: for I had gone with the multitude; I went with them to the house of God, with the voice of joy and praise, with a multitude that kept holy-day.

5 Why art thou [‡] cast down, O my soul? and why art thou disquieted in me? hope thou in God; for I shall yet [§] praise him [‖] for the help of his countenance.

6 O my God, my soul is cast down within me: therefore will I remember thee from the land of Jordan, [*] and of the Hermonites, [†] from the hill Mizar. [‡]

7 [c] Deep calleth unto deep at the noise of thy water-spouts: all thy waves and thy billows are gone over me.

8 Yet the LORD [d] will command his loving-kindness in the day-time, and [e] in the night his song shall be with me, and my prayer unto the God of my life.

9 I will say unto God my rock, Why hast thou forgotten me? why go I mourning because of the oppression of the enemy?

more our lying refuges are swept away, the more reason we have to trust in and call on God, who never disappoints any. With holy resignation to his strokes, we must earnestly beg the forgiveness of the cause, and the removal of the rod. We cannot impeach the equity of his judgments, nor withstand their force. But if they set us a weeping and praying, and render us weaned from this world, God, our friend and companion, will quickly give us relief. And by his grace he will ripen us for heaven, before he give the mortal stroke.

REFLECTIONS UPON PSALM XL.—Alas! what fearful and lasting troubles of body and mind Jesus and his people have allotted them on earth! What patience is necessary under them! But God is their deliverer. And greatly exalting, establishing, joyous, and encouraging, is their deliverance at last. Happy are those, who, renouncing all other confidences, trust in God alone. Great is the number, the marvellous grace, of his thoughts and acts towards Jesus Christ and his children in the work of redemption. But how insignificant were Jewish sacrifices in respect of holy obedience: and infinitely more so in comparison of Jesus the Son of God, and his complete holiness of nature, obedience of life, and satisfactory sufferings! With great cheerfulness he engaged for us in the counsel and covenant of peace. And with a steady purpose of love he fulfilled his work, in executing every saving office for our good. Dreadful was the load of our iniquities imputed to him. But he finished transgression, and made an end of sin, and publishes to men the declarations and offers of gospel grace. Let us then embrace every promise, as ratified by his blood: and in the faith of his being made sin for us, that we might be made the righteousness of God in him, let us cheerfully and gratefully devote ourselves, by the most solemn ties, to his service. In his name let us fight the good fight of faith, and finish our course. Behold how the prayers of saints, but chiefly the intercession of Jesus Christ, issues in the ruin of his enemies, and the prosperity and deliverance of his friends! It is infinitely dangerous to mock or despise them. But no griefs, no poverty, can render them miserable who fear him. There is a throne of grace to which they have the boldest access. Their God, and all that he hath or doth, is the ground of their joy. His inexhaustible fulness, adapted to their wants, the prayers of faith can unlock. The promises are sure; and the moment of fulfilment hastens forward.

REFLECTIONS UPON PSALM XLI.—Whilst here also we behold Jesus Christ through poverty, affliction, malicious and treacherous enemies, entering into his glory, to the endless honour of his Father, and the joy of his heart, let us observe, that kindness to God's poor and afflicted is as much our interest as our duty, and God's blessing is the only comfort of every estate. It can give rest in trouble, and make even grief to smile. And pleasant under trouble are penitent confessions and fervent requests, founded on the promise and mercy of God. Sin fills men's hearts and tongues with enmity against Christ and his people: yet vile are their efforts, and as vain their hopes. But happy trials are those which excite our prayers, animate our faith, increase our dependence on God, and tune our hearts to his praise; and which make JEHOVAH's love to our souls more evident and precious.

A Psalm for the time of persecution.

¶ TO THE CHIEF MUSICIAN FOR THE SONS OF KORAH, MASCHIL.

WE* [a] have heard with our ears, O God, our fathers have told us, what work thou didst in their days, in the times of old:

2 How thou didst drive out the heathen with thy hand, and plantedst them; how thou didst afflict the people, and cast them out.

3 For they got not the land in possession by their own sword, neither did their own arm save them; but thy right hand, and thine arm, and the light of thy countenance, because thou hadst a favour unto them.†

REFLECTIONS UPON PSALM XLII.—Nothing but God himself can satisfy believing souls. If the sense of his love be withdrawn, every enjoyment is tasteless. No cisterns of earthly comforts can quench their thirst, their earnest desire, for the LIVING FOUNTAIN. Constrained absence from the public means of fellowship with God, is a heavy and tormenting burden to a faithful soul, and quickens his longings after them. No wonder then that he groans earnestly to be clothed upon with his house which is from heaven. O what terrible afflictions and sorrows are in the lot of God's favourite saints! When outward distress lies heavy, inward temptations are often violent. And the joys which we have tasted in God, make the withdrawment of his presence and comforts the more grievous. But we often cause our own dejections under trouble, by poring on our corruptions or distress, and forgetting the promises, grace, and faithfulness of our Redeemer. We had need therefore to call our souls to account for their conduct. And if we cannot get relief by pleading with our burdened spirits, we should commit our case to our gracious God. And the more furious and manifold the storms of trouble are, the more earnest ought to be our believing applications to, and dependence on God. Let Providence cast us where it will, our God and our prayers should still attend us. Our faith may be enfeebled and sore shaken, but it will never fail. Remembrance of what God is to us, and hath done for us, should suppress our unbelieving fears. If he command his loving-kindness, neither earth nor hell can hinder us from the benefit of it. In our darkest nights of trouble, desertion, and temptation, we have always much mercy to thank God for. Whatever repeated encouragement our feeble minds may need, if God be our God, our life, and the health of our countenance, neither earth, nor death, nor hell, is able to hurt us.

REFLECTIONS UPON PSALM XLIII.—When men wrong us, and God deserts us, our only refuge is still in God himself. He may frown, but he cannot cease to love his people, however hard they find it to believe so amidst deep convictions and raging lusts. It may be for a time difficult to reconcile God's providences with his promises; but with a little patience the mystery will be unveiled. Such as love Christ's appearance shall have their cause judged far sooner than their enemies wish, and far better than themselves conceive. Next to God himself, the saints love nothing more dearly than the ordinances of his grace. But none can approach ordinances aright, unless God both lead and draw their hearts; and it is for his sake the saints delight to be there. Men never attend ordinances aright, but when they have fellowship with Christ, as their altar, their atonement, their food, their God, their joy. Intimate fellowship with God cannot but tune our hearts and tongues to his praise. And the more we deal with God by faith, we shall see the more sin and evil in inward despondency.

REFLECTIONS UPON PSALM XLIV.—Memorials of past mercies ought to be carefully recorded, and transmitted from age to age, as an encouragement in time of need, as well as a ground of thankfulness. It is never outward force, but Jesus Christ's word and Spirit, that build up the church, and triumph over the powers of darkness. If we want help in trouble, we must renounce all other confidences, and take God alone to be our kind deliverer and boast; so shall our troubles and griefs be quickly turned into everlasting praise.—It is common, but sinful, for them whom God casts down to think themselves utterly cast off, and to shrink under

¶ TO THE CHIEF MUSICIAN UPON SHOSHANNIM, FOR THE SONS OF KORAH, * MASCHIL, A SONG OF bLOVES.

A. M. cir. 2949, or 2968. B. C. cir. 1055, or 1036.

MY heart † is inditing ‡ a good matter: I speak of the things which I have made touching the King; § my tongue is the pen of a ready writer.

2 Thou art fairer ‖ than the children of men; ª grace is poured into thy lips: therefore God hath blessed thee for ever.

3 Gird thy sword * upon thy thigh, O most Mighty, with thy glory and thy majesty.

4 And in thy majesty † ride prosperously, because of truth, and meekness, and righteousness; and thy right hand shall teach thee terrible things.

5 Thine arrows are sharp in the heart of the King's enemies; whereby the people fall under thee.

6 Thy throne, O God, is for ever and ever: the sceptre of thy kingdom is a right sceptre.

7 Thou lovest righteousness, and hatest wickedness: therefore God, thy God, hath ᵇ anointed thee with the oil of gladness above thy fellows. ‡

8 All thy garments smell of myrrh, and aloes, and cassia, out of the ivory palaces, whereby they have made thee glad. §

9 Kings' daughters were among thy honourable women: upon thy right hand did stand ‖ the queen in gold of Ophir. *

10 Hearken, O daughter, † and consider, and incline thine ear; forget also thine own people, and thy father's house:

11 ᶜ So shall the King greatly desire thy beauty: for he is thy Lord; and worship thou him.

12 And the daughter of Tyre ‡ shall be there with a gift; even the rich among the people shall entreat thy favour.

13 The King's daughter is all glorious within: her clothing is of wrought gold. §

14 She shall be brought unto the King in raiment of needle-work: the ᵈ virgins her companions that follow her shall be brought unto thee.

15 ᵉ With gladness and rejoicing shall they be brought: they shall enter into the King's palace.

PSALM XLVI.

God with believers in times of trouble.

¶ TO THE CHIEF MUSICIAN ª FOR THE SONS OF KORAH, A SONG UPON ª ALAMOTH.

GOD is our refuge † and strength, a very present help in trouble:

2 Therefore will not we fear, though the earth be removed, and though the mountains be carried into ‡ the midst of the sea;

3 Though the waters thereof roar and be troubled, though the mountains shake with the swelling thereof. Selah. §

4 There is a river, ‖ the streams whereof shall make glad the city of God, the holy place of the tabernacles of the most High.

5 God is in the midst of her; she shall not be moved: God shall help her, ᵇ and that right early.

6 The heathen raged; the kingdoms were moved: he uttered his voice; the earth melted.

7 The LORD of hosts is with us; the God of Jacob * is † our refuge. Selah.

8 ᶜ Come, behold the works of the LORD, what desolations he hath made in the earth.

9 He maketh wars to cease unto the end of the earth; he breaketh the bow, and cutteth the spear in sunder; he burneth the chariot in the fire.

10 ᵈ Be still, ‡ and know that I am God: I will be exalted among the heathen, I will be exalted in the earth.

11 ᵉ The LORD of hosts is with us: the God of Jacob is our refuge. Selah.

reproach and suffering, as if they were not our appointed cross. For it is not now, but hereafter, that God will make us to know and admire the mystery of his Providence. It is especially distressing to the faithful, when they falsely apprehend that God gets no glory by the afflictions of his people; nay, instead thereof, is dishonoured and reproached.—All God's people, though not called to be proper martyrs, have their particular sufferings allotted to them for his sake. But it is dangerous to comply with sins in order to shun troubles. Highly provoking to God are treachery, apostasy, and idolatry; and fearfully he will search out and punish them. But great is the mercy, that nothing can break his covenant of grace with his people; and that not sins of mere infirmity, but indulged provocations, are held as a violation of their covenant of duties. And if he appear asleep amidst our troubles, it is to humble us under his mighty hand, to awaken our importunate prayers, and that he may the more magnify his mercy and power in our deliverance.

REFLECTIONS UPON PSALM XLV.—Discoveries of Jesus' glory powerfully animate our hearts, and tune our tongues to commend him. How glorious is his person as God-man! Rich in grace are the qualities of his heart and words of his mouth. In him it pleased the Father that all fulness of blessings for men should dwell. In almighty power, by his word and influences of his Spirit, he conquered multitudes in the apostolic age to the obedience of faith: and by the strokes of his vengeance did and shall destroy his Jewish or other implacable opposers. Having by himself purged our sins, he, as our righteous Sovereign, sat down at the right hand of God, as the reward of his righteous service; and is, in the most transcendent manner, filled with the Holy Ghost to shed on us abundantly. In a most glorious and heart-engaging manner, his manhood, mediatorial offices, and righteousness, appear in the heavens above, and in his church and ordinances below. And his people, adorned with gifts and graces, are raised up together, and made to sit together with him. His chosen ones, both Jews and Gentiles, in the day of his power, are made to hear his voice in the gospel, to renounce all others, and devote themselves entirely to him and his service, as the objects of his gracious and everlasting delight. In shining robes of righteousness, grace, and holy conversation, each in their order are adorned; and after serving their generation by the will of God, they shall be brought and admitted into his heavenly palace with exceeding joy. Instead of Jewish fathers shall there be Gentile converts; and instead of glorified saints shall there be another generation, begotten by the power of his grace, all made kings and priests unto God! Thus, by the spread and influence of the gospel, shall Jesus' renown and honour be perpetuated on earth, while those in heaven above shall praise him for ever and ever.

REFLECTIONS UPON PSALM XLVI.—When dangers appear greatest, our faith in God's promise and perfections should be strongest. If we can triumph in God as our own God, we may triumph over every trouble and danger. The revolutions on earth can little affect them whose hearts are duly fixed on things above. They need never fear, and they shall never fail, who have God for their refuge and their Joy in the Lord.

¶ TO THE CHIEF MUSICIAN, A PSALM FOR THE SONS OF KORAH.

A. M. cir. 2950. B. C. cir. 1054.

O CLAP your hands,* all ye people; shout unto God with the voice of triumph.

2 For the LORD most High is terrible;† he is a great King over all the earth.

3 He shall subdue the people under us, and the nations under our feet.‡

4 He shall choose our inheritance for us, the excellency of Jacob whom he loved. Selah.§

5 God is gone up with a shout, the LORD with the sound of a trumpet.‖

6 Sing praises to God, sing praises: sing praises unto our King, sing praises.

7 For God is the King of all the earth: sing ye praises with understanding.*

8 God reigneth over the heathen: God sitteth upon the throne of his holiness.

9 The princes of the people are gathered together, even the people of the God of Abraham: for the shields† of the earth belong unto God; he is greatly exalted.

* There are feelings and sentiments which words cannot express, and then the aid of action is commanded, and specially the hands as the organs and emblems of all activity. See 2 Kin. 11. 12.—ED.

§ See Note on Ps. 3. 2.—ED.

PSALM XLVIII.

The praises of God in Zion.

¶ A SONG[a] AND PSALM * FOR THE SONS OF KORAH.

GREAT is the LORD, and greatly to be praised in the city† of our God, in the mountain‡ of his holiness.

2 Beautiful for situation, the joy of the whole earth, is mount Zion, on the [b] sides of the north,§ the city of the great King.

3 God is known in her palaces for a refuge.

4 For, lo, the kings were assembled, they passed by together.

5 They saw it, and so they marvelled; they were troubled, and hasted away.

6 [c] Fear took hold upon them there, and pain, as of a woman in travail.‖

7 Thou breakest the ships of Tarshish with an east wind.

8 As we have heard, so have we seen in [d] the city of the LORD of hosts, in the city of our God: God will establish it for ever. Selah.

9 We have thought of thy loving-kindness, O God, in the midst of thy temple.

10 According to thy name, O God, so is thy praise unto the ends of the earth: thy [e] right hand is full of righteousness.

PSALM XLIX.

A Psalm setting forth the vanity of earthly, and the value and reality of heavenly things.

A. M. cir. 2959. B. C. cir. 1045.

¶ TO THE CHIEF MUSICIAN, A PSALM * FOR THE SONS OF KORAH.

HEAR† this, all ye people; give ear, all ye inhabitants of the world:

2 Both low and high, rich and poor, together.

3 My mouth shall speak of wisdom; and the meditation of my heart shall be of understanding.

4 I will incline mine ear to a parable; I will open my dark saying upon the harp.

5 Wherefore should I fear in the days of evil, when the iniquity of my heels‡ shall compass me about?

6 They that trust in their wealth, and boast themselves in the multitude of their riches;

7 None of them can by any means redeem his brother, nor give to God a ransom for him;

8 (For the redemption of their soul is precious, and it ceaseth for ever;)§

9 That he should still live for ever, and not see corruption.

10 For he seeth that wise men die,‖ likewise the fool and the brutish person perish, and leave their wealth to others.

11 Their inward thought is, that their houses shall continue for ever, and their dwelling-places * to all generations: they call their lands after their own names.

12 Nevertheless [a] man being in honour abideth not: he is like the beasts that perish.†

13 This their way is their folly; yet their posterity ‡ approve their sayings.§ Selah.

14 Like sheep they are laid in the grave; death shall feed on them; and the upright shall have dominion over them in the morning; and their [b] beauty shall consume ‖ in the grave from their dwelling.

* Or, of.

† Four things prove the prophetic speaker to be Christ. 1. The confident spirit, and universality of the call, as of one entitled to audience, ver. 1, 2. The theme of wisdom so confidently announced, ver. 2. 3. The direct quotation of ver. 4. by Mat. 13. 35. as fulfilled in the parables of our Lord. 4. The confident trust of the speaker in a glorious resurrection and acceptance with God, ver. 15.—ED.

‡ This word is translated by high authorities, supplanters, that is, false Christs, seeking to supplant me in name—of the world supplanting me in the hearts, and of worldly rulers supplanting me in my authority over the kingdoms of this world. But does it not rather signify the iniquity of his followers—of Judas who betrayed him, of the disciples who forsook him, and of the whole host of believers whose accumulated iniquities he bore in his body on the tree?—ED.

§ "For so great is the redemption price for his life, that a brother should for ever desist from the attempt."—Boothroyd.

‖ And if even the wise man cannot rescue himself from temporal death, how can any save himself or his brother from death spiritual and eternal?—ED.

strength. Notwithstanding all her enemies, his church shall in him obtain joy, establishment, and deliverance. If by his word, his Spirit, and his blood, we enjoy communications of grace and comfort, we are amply repaid for all the storms that can be raised by the world that lieth in wickedness. But in what a tremendous and awful manner he from age to age revenges the injuries done to his church, the ruin of the nations around Canaan, and of the Assyrians, Chaldeans, Persians, Syro-grecians, Romans, Antichristians, Mahometans, and others, have or shall manifest. And it is highly proper to contemplate his infinite perfections, displayed in all his conquests of vengeance or grace; that in every age, in every case, we may have faith in him, as our Protector, Deliverer, and Strength.

REFLECTIONS UPON PSALM XLVII.—Behold, my soul, our exalted Lord Jesus, terrible to his enemies in punishing and destroying them; but kind to his chosen, in subduing them throughout all the world to himself—in choosing for them, as his excellent ones, their portion in the new covenant and in the heavenly state. Behold how, amidst surrounding troops of hymning angels, he ascended on high; had all power in heaven and earth given him: and by his gospel, word, and gracious influence, he gathers the nations to himself, that they may be blessed together with faithful Abraham; and even makes the rulers of nations submit to his yoke, or helpful to his cause!

REFLECTIONS UPON PSALM XLVIII.—Great, and greatly to be praised, is our exalted Redeemer. Glorious is his gospel church, in which his presence dwells. And in a marvellous manner hath he, in instances unnumbered, been known for her refuge. When ravaging invaders and furious persecutors have concurred in attempts to destroy her, their plots and fury have often issued in their own ruin, and his people's triumph and praise of his kindness. Quickly shall her remaining enemies be destroyed; and no gates of hell have, or ever shall, prevail against her.

THE mighty God, even the LORD, hath spoken,[†] and called the earth, from the rising of the sun unto the going down thereof.

2 Out of Zion, the perfection of beauty, God hath shined.[‡]

3 [b] Our God shall come, and shall not keep silence: a fire[§] shall devour before him, and it shall be very tempestuous round about him.

4 He shall call to the heavens from above, and to the earth, that he may judge his people.

Her bulwarks, palaces of ordinances, and officers, are built on Jesus the Rock of ages, and are protected by his arm of omnipotence. Let us then declare his wondrous works, and our relation to him, to posterity, as an honour to him, and an encouragement to them to come and cleave to him, and triumph in his praise.

REFLECTIONS UPON PSALM XLIX.—Alas! how the hearts of men cleave to earthly enjoyments! The poor need as much to be warned against envy and discontentment, as the rich against pride and carnal confidence. And the truths of God ought to be inculcated with the greatest seriousness, both by word and by example. Never ought saints (no, not when they suffer the charges and chastisements of their sins of conversation,) to abandon themselves to unbelieving fears and doubts of God's all-sufficiency and love.—The day of death is a trying time with respect to true happiness. And then a sense of God's love, and a prospect of eternal glory, are infinitely more precious than thousands of gold and silver. O the dreadful folly of most men, who seek for, hold delight in, and depend on things of this world, as if they were their God, their ALL IN ALL! and yet how unavailable to ransom the soul, perpetuate the life, or preserve from hell! To judge of things aright, we must weigh time with eternity. It is neither wealth nor poverty, but Jesus Christ's righteousness and grace, that can render us respected of God, or really happy, in time or eternity. It is redemption through his blood that gives hope in death. It is not their own vaunts, or the world's admiration, but the word of God, that adjusts men's real character. It is not what we have here, but what we can carry into the other world, that constitutes the true riches. They are only wise who consider their latter end. Nay, in death, the state of the most loathsome animal is infinitely preferable to that of the unregenerate sinner.

REFLECTIONS UPON PSALM L.—Great is the majesty, extensive the high sovereignty, and terrible the wrath of God! And great is his care of his saints, who have embraced his new covenant, of which Jesus Christ's atoning sacrifice is the condition. But God hath full power to change the positive institutions of his own worship at his pleasure, and to reject his long professed people for their contempt of his Son. No obedience is acceptable to him but what proceeds from the faith of his being our own God in Christ. To obey was always better than sacrifice; and prayer to, and praise of, God more than burnt-offerings. And since Jesus' death, and Jerusalem's destruction, Jewish ceremonies are not only vain, but hurtful. But never is our gracious God more ready to hear our supplications than in a day of trouble: and what grateful vows and thanksgivings doth he then deserve at our hands! Notwithstanding antecedent gospel declarations, how rarely doth the Son of man, when he cometh, either in remarkable mercy or judgment, find faith in the earth, or indeed aught but empty formalities and gross wickedness. And none are worse than profane clergymen, stained with hypocrisy, covetousness, whoredom, slander of Christ and his saints, blasphemy of God, and every thing horrid. But graciously he warns ere he strikes. And to bow before the sceptre of his grace, receive his gospel offers, and practise holiness in his fear, is the way to escape the rod of his judgments, and to share his eternal favours.

REFLECTIONS UPON PSALM LI.—Into what grievous iniquities the best of men, if left to themselves, quickly fall!—but never into any from which their gracious God does not recover them. Such as sin publicly ought to take to themselves public shame, for the honour of their God, and for a warning to others. Sin is a heavy burden to a penitent soul. It forces from his heart importunate cries for pardoning and purging mercy. And nothing less than promises of mercy can encourage him to pray in faith: and nothing less than merciful pardons and cleansings through Jesus' blood can save him from hell. God's blotting out of sin fixes a penitential remembrance of it, and repeated grief on account of it, in the heart of a saint. And a heart truly broken for sin never seeks exculpation, but desires to take all shame and confusion. The exceeding sinfulness of sin lies in its opposition to God's nature and law. And true penitents justify God in all his judgments, however heavy upon them. No person was ever really humbled for sin, till brought to see the inward and natural corruption of his heart. It is not outward forms, but inward reality of grace, that God primarily requires; and it is he alone that can work it in us. He alone must forgive our sins, purging our conscience by the blood of his Son. He alone must sanctify and renew our hearts, pour out his Spirit, restore our joys, and grant us his comfortable presence. What anguish and breaking of soul, loads of guilt, and of sorrow for it, can produce! But God, who gives the pardon, must also give the comfort of it. Renewed souls count the service of God the most perfect freedom: and the experience of God's remarkable kindness effectually animates to zeal for his glory, the instruction of others, and the welfare of his church. Broken-hearted penitents, viewing themselves as Achans in the camp, are the most earnest wrestlers with God for the happiness of the church. And all the returns of service, and praise to God therein, must be founded on his special favours, received or secured in Christ and his blood.

REFLECTIONS UPON PSALM LII.—Hardened indeed is the sinner, who abuses the goodness of God to glory in his wickedness. Malice, lying, and craft, are the abhorrence of God and the image of the devil; and quickly shall they render men miserable in life, and damned in hell. Quickly shall those who trust in wealth or wickedness remove into everlasting flames. And the striking judgments of God on the wicked ought to be carefully observed, and improved as warnings, while we thank him for them, as manifestations of his own glory, and means of our deliverance. God marvellously founds the prosperity and promised honours of his people on their enemies' ruin. And what he has promised we must patiently wait for. None that trust in his mercy shall be disappointed, but ever flourish in grace, and triumph in praise.

18 [h] He hath delivered my soul in peace from the battle that was against me: for there were many with me.[†]

19 God shall hear, and afflict them, even he that abideth [‡] of old. Selah. [i] Because they have no changes, therefore they fear not God.

REFLECTIONS UPON PSALM LIII.—What a fountain of atheism is in our hearts! What folly—what filth—what evil—is in every sin! and yet what unnumbered acts and fearful fruits of it everywhere abound in the world. But fear and shame shall at last overwhelm the sinners, particularly those who ate up, persecuted, and oppressed the people of God. Even the marvellous salvation of men through Christ shall contribute to the everlasting destruction of obstinate sinners. And the endless songs of ransomed men will not only attend, but add to, their everlasting misery and grief.

REFLECTIONS UPON PSALM LIV.—The prayer of faith is a sovereign remedy in every distress: and all salvation is of God, who never fails those that seek him. Nearest neighbours and relations are often the saints' bitterest enemies. And when men leave God out of their sight, there is no wickedness too great for them. But if he be our helper, he will soon raise us up friends, and rid us of our enemies, according to his promise. The soul is safe enough that has the security of God's infallible promise. And past experience is the ground of cordial thanksgiving, and the earnest of continual support and future deliverance.

REFLECTIONS UPON PSALM LV.—While here, as in a glass, we behold Jesus, hated, reproached, betrayed, and murdered at Jerusalem, and the vengeance of God overtaking his persecutors in the destruction and dispersion of the Jewish nation, let us observe, that the best of men are ordinarily most exposed to the hatred and reproach of a carnal world: and good men may, in great trials, find their fears strong, and their faith shaken; but it is a great mercy that they have Jesus' bosom, and the state of glory above, to flee to when they can get no peace nor rest in this world. The city, the church of God, may soon be fearfully corrupted by the influence of wicked rulers. And none are more apt to promote the corruption, or betray the saints, than apostate or empty professors. There has always been a sad mixture of such in the church. Carnal policy, and selfish ends, may carry men far and long in a religious profession, even where there is no sincerity of heart. Earnest prayers of faith are effectual to bring salvation from God. How shameful then is it that they are so little used; and that the stated meals for our bodies are more frequent than those for our souls! It is God's being on our side that raises us above fear from our adversaries. Too often

PSALM LVI.

A prayer in time of persecution.

¶ TO THE CHIEF MUSICIAN UPON JONATH-ELEM-RECHOKIM, a MICHTAM OF DAVID, WHEN THE PHILISTINES TOOK HIM IN GATH.

A. M. cir. 2916. B. C. cir. 1088.

BE merciful unto me, O God; for man [a] would swallow me up: he fighting daily oppresseth me.

2 [†] Mine enemies would daily swallow me up: for they be many that fight against me, O thou most High.[‡]

3 [b] What time I am afraid, I will trust in thee.

4 In God I will praise his word:[§] in God I have put my trust; I will not fear what flesh can do unto me.

5 Every day they [c] wrest my words: [‖] all their thoughts are against me for evil.

6 They gather themselves together, they hide themselves, they mark my steps, when they wait for my soul.

7 [d] Shall they escape by iniquity? in thine anger cast down the people, O God.[*]

8 [e] Thou tellest my wanderings: put thou my tears into thy bottle: are they not in thy book?[†]

9 When I cry unto thee, then shall mine enemies turn back: this I know; for God is for me.

10 [f] In God[‡] will I praise his word: in the LORD will I praise his word.

11 [g] In God have I put my trust: I will not be afraid what man can do unto me.

12 Thy vows are upon me, O God: I will render praises unto thee.

13 For thou hast delivered my soul from death: [§] wilt not thou deliver my feet from falling, that I may walk before God in the light of the living?

* Or, Destroy not, A golden Psalm, &c.

† That the 58th is a Psalm of Christ, is obvious from comparing ver 10. with John 15. 25; and its parallelism with Ps. 58, conducts to the conclusion that the congregation (ver. 1.) is an appeal against the Sanhedrim who pronounced sentence against our Lord.—Ed.

‡ Ye appear to weigh out justice, with the exactness of a balance; but are, in reality, dealing out nothing but violence. —Ed.

§ Or, asp.

‖ The deafness here attributed to the adder, is not deafness to sound, but to charming; so the ear of our Lord's judges was not deaf to evidence, but to just conclusions.—Note. The many statements made by travellers concerning serpent-charming in the East, seem to be nothing more than the evidences of inattention and credulity of false pretensions, and successful juggling: nor do they receive any countenance; but, on the contrary, a flat contradiction, from the statement of the Psalmist.—Ed.

want of trouble hardens men in bold impiety. But impenitence and perdition are inseparably linked together. Falsehood and perfidy will quickly find an avenging God. But happy, happy for ever, are they who trust in the Lord, and by the prayers of faith cast all their burdens, troubles, works, and cares upon God, as their God and Father in Christ!

REFLECTIONS UPON PSALM LVI.—How inveterate is the enmity of the wicked against Jesus Christ and his people! With unanimity, cruelty, malice, restlessness, and craft, they exert themselves to destroy them, while they spy out their ways, wrest their words, and wait for their halting. But blessed are those trials which drive us nearer to God. Strong faith is necessary when troubles and dangers are very great. But the unchangeable promise of God, yea and amen in Christ, is not only sufficient ground of trust, but of cordial praise. No enemies that we can have are too great for God to humble, or too secure, strong, or daring, to withstand his blow. They who have him for their friend need not fear the impotent threats or strokes of human worms. Saints may, nay must, weep in prayer for a time; but God regards every word, every tear; and will soon make them issue in praise to the weepers, and in lasting ruin to their enemies. It is reasonable then that vows made, as well as mercies received, should animate us to trust in, pray to, serve and praise him, while we live in the enjoyment of the light of his countenance.

REFLECTIONS UPON PSALM LVII.—While saints continue on earth, they will still need prayer from their heart, and mercy from their God. For into what devouring beasts, and deceitful devils, hath sin transformed their enemies! Heart, lips, and hands appear all animated by infernal malice and craft. But they have a God of salvation, a new covenant in Jesus' blood, to secure their safety and their enemies' ruin. And often, for the glory of God, these enemies perish in the snares which they had laid for others. With what fixed thought, wonder, desire, and delight, with what ardour of inward powers, ought we then to praise and glorify God, for the mercy that made and fulfils, and the faithfulness which establishes every new covenant promise! And with great fervour ought we to desire our almighty Lord to glorify himself in heaven above, and in all the earth below.

a The Syrians beyond the river Euphrates, and the Syrians of Zobah, 2 Sam. 8. 3, 13, 14. & 10. 16. 1 Chr. 18. 3, 12, 13.

* Though Israel and Judah were both led captive, they were never scattered among the nations (Deut. 28. 64.) till after the crucifixion of our Lord. This Psalm is therefore mainly a prophetic prayer prepared for the believing penitent Jews, when their heart shall turn to the Lord.—Ed.

† The legitimate use of wine is for revival of him who, through faintness and deep sorrow, is ready to perish, (Prov. 31. 6.) but no cordial is administered to the weary Jew, but what produces astonishment, or rather confusion of vision and of spirit.—Ed.

‡ See note on Ps. 3. 2.—Ed.

§ Messiah, who is the "truth," (ver. 4. John 14. 6.) here intercedes, because him "the Father heareth always," (John 11. 42.) and prophesies the future allotment of the land to the children of the restoration, the emblem also of the spiritual endowment and temporal blessedness of the Gentile church.—Ed.

‖ Shechem was the first place in Canaan where ground was purchased for the permanent erection of the altar El-elohe-Israel, (Gen. 33. 19.) It was also the place to which Joshua summoned the tribes, and where they ratified their covenant with God, Josh. 24. 1, 25. It was also a city of refuge, (Josh. 20. 7.) It literally signifies a portion. From which four particulars, the meaning of the promise may be fully gathered.—Ed.

REFLECTIONS UPON PSALM LVIII.—What a plague to a church or nation are unjust rulers! Oppression by law is the most grievous tyranny; and good men often suffer by the partiality of unjust judges. Greatly humbling to such as see it, is the wickedness of the human heart. And it makes those in whom it reigns earnest and obstinate in sinful courses. Neither the terrors of God's wrath, nor the hopes of the gospel, can effectually change it, unless the Spirit of God open the ear to instruction. But it is a mercy for the saints, that God cares for and protects them amidst such barbarous, brutish, and deceitful men, who have power on their sides; that he restrains these enemies at pleasure, and makes them even to waste themselves. In a sudden and tremendous manner they are sometimes destroyed. And however the godly now pity the folly, and bewail the conduct of sinners, they will hereafter approve God's justice in their punishment, and triumph in their ruin. At last God will make the most haughty and brutish to know that he governs the world; and that it is only in the way of holiness and virtue that real happiness is to be found.

REFLECTIONS UPON PSALM LIX.—Firm faith of our new covenant interest in God encourages to bold supplications in a day of trouble. None can destroy if he defend us. Though none be innocent before God, they may be so before men, at least with respect to particular crimes. And such innocence, though it cannot protect us from evil men, may encourage our appeals to God for redress. It is common for sinners to think that God overlooks their wickedness; but the awful punishment thereof will make them know that he observed it. If we wait on God, and depend on his mercy, we are sure of preservation in trials, and even of prevention with favours. But how dreadful is their danger against whom the prayers of Christ and his people ascend! The tongue, defiled with slander, cursing, and falsehood, will quickly burn in endless fire. The punishment which God inflicts on men, correspondent to their sins, will force them to know his existence and government: and the sufferings of Jesus Christ, and his people, shall at last issue in everlasting honours, triumphs in their God, and praises for his mercy and kindness.

REFLECTIONS UPON PSALM LX.—What terrible rejection of God, what fearful convulsions and miseries in nations and churches, are occasioned by sin! But the deeper our distresses are, the more is the power and grace of our God magnified in our deliverance. Not David raised to a throne, according to promise, but Jesus exalted to his Father's right hand, and manifested in the truth of the gospel, is our banner displayed,—our means of victory and deliverance: let us then look to him and be saved. If sin has made deadly breaches, the sovereign grace of God can repair them. If we turn to him in prayer, we may expect his return in mercy to us. Having loved us freely, his right hand shall save us. Our deliverance may be delayed, but cannot be defeated. While Jesus subdues his opposers in mercy, or destroys them in wrath, let us make him our own, and every promised blessing of grace or glory will necessarily follow. When he pleases, he can make our bitterest enemies our warmest friends. At his pleasure he can unite nations and churches. Whatever difficulties then stand in our way, let faith overcome them. Though we seem cast off, let us cleave fast to the promise, and trust and wait for the salvation of God. The greater our danger, our cries and prayers ought to be the more earnest. Let us put no trust in human helps; but in God's name and strength encounter our spiritual enemies; and so shall our victory be sure.

REFLECTIONS UPON PSALM LXI.—Often are the saints overwhelmed with their sense of sin, their troubles, temptations, and fears. But whatever we be, and in whatever condition, a throne of grace and a prayer-hearing God are at hand to apply to. Jesus, the establishing and protecting Rock, is near; and his word and Spirit are ready to lead us to him. And every former experience of protection or deliverance ought to encourage our flight to his refuge. Our trusting to his promises, perfections, and providences, and our cordial worship of him here, will issue in our being for ever with him in his mansions of glory above.—God hears our prayers, regards our vows, and will provide for us every thing good We are heirs of God, and joint heirs with Christ. Since King Jesus for ever lives, for ever sits enthroned amidst mercy and truth, we may confidently expect to live and reign with him in everlasting felicity and praise. Let then the vows which we have made be conscientiously performed; and let praising of God, and paying of our vows, be our daily employment.

REFLECTIONS UPON PSALM LXII.—Patient and submissive resignation of our souls to God is the certain mean of a happy issue of all our troubles. He is the alone author and finisher of all our salvation. In so doing, corruptions and temptations may shake us, but cannot move us, either fully or finally, from grace. While liars and traitors meet with destruction from God, they who trust in him may defy hell or death to hurt them. In him they are saved, secured, strengthened, and protected; and in him, not in themselves, do they glory. The more their faith in him is exercised, the stronger it becomes. The more we trust in men, or in worldly enjoyments, the more disappointment and hurt we shall meet with. But the more we depend on, cry to, or consider God, we shall find the more pleasure, safety, and comfort. The mercy and power which we see in him shall be employed to furnish, protect, and reward us, and to cut off our enemies.

PSALM LXVI.

A Psalm of joy and praise, for deliverance and prosperity.

¶ TO THE CHIEF MUSICIAN, A SONG OR PSALM.

A. M. cir. 2956. B. C. cir. 1048.

MAKE a joyful noise unto God, [a] all ye lands:

2 [b] Sing forth the honour of his name; make his praise glorious.

a Heb. all the earth. Deut. 32. 43. 1 Chr. 16. 23, 24.

b Ps. 47. 1, 6, 7. & 117. 1, 2. Ex. xv. Judg. v. 1 Sam. 2. 1—10, &c.

REFLECTIONS UPON PSALM LXIII.—What a dry and barren wilderness is this world, with nothing in it that can satisfy the longings of a soul! And the more we find of the emptiness of created enjoyments, the more we should fly to the fulness of God, as our God and all-sufficient portion. They who have experienced fellowship with him, and discoveries of his glory in public ordinances, will feelingly regret the want of them, and ardently desire the re-enjoyment of them. But great is the mercy, that God himself, the fountain of happiness, and his throne of grace, are everywhere accessible. And if our hearts be refreshed with the tokens of his favour, they ought to be enlarged in his praise. Happy and delightful is it to meditate on his loving-kindness—and in his strength to follow him closely in the means of grace, and paths of duty. It is his help and favour only that can tune our hearts to praise him, while we enjoy his protection.—Dreadful is the destruction of the enemies of Jesus Christ and his people! But eternal shall be the honours, and unspeakable the joys, of him and his children, while all their malicious reproachers and discouragers shall be filled with astonishment, and struck into endless silence and confusion.

REFLECTIONS UPON PSALM LXIV.—A believer's troubles and enemies often fill his heart with fear, and drive him to his prayers. And, in every age and place, the bitterest words of reproach and infamy are liberally shot forth against the most faithful saints. Being perfect in Jesus' imputed righteousness, and having the truth of grace in their hearts, they are hated by the world, who cannot bear their holy and heavenly conversation. Daring in wickedness, their enemies often neither fear God nor regard man, but encourage one another in sin; nor do they stick at anything to accomplish their malicious designs. With what care they pry into the faults of the godly, suborn false witnesses, wrest their words, and eke out their defamations with impudent falsehoods! but God will at last revenge the injuries done to his people. And when he strikes home, there is no escaping. Then the reproaches of the wicked, and their horrid imprecations, shall draw down loads of wrath on their own heads. And it is our wisdom to profit by the judgments of others. Too often warnings are lost through inconsideration. Even persecutors ought to learn and tremble while the door of mercy is yet open. And saints should rejoice in God's manifestation of his power and justice, and in their own deliverance; and trust in him, and make him their glory.

REFLECTIONS UPON PSALM LXV.—Patient expectations for God shall be succeeded with joyful praises of him in his church and ordinances. And candid vows must be followed with conscientious fulfilment. God's readiness to hear prayer should encourage every one earnestly and hopefully to address him in every case: and sense of loading guilt or prevalent lusts ought not to make us despair, but to implore, believe, and admire the pardoning and sanctifying mercy of God. Fellowship with God is our greatest happiness. And it is not our merit, but his gracious choice and effectual grace, that brings us to it. Nor must it be by transient starts, but by a fixed attendance on the ordinances of his grace, as nothing but the fulness of God in Christ can satisfy our hungry souls. And, however terrible the answer must be, God never disappoints the prayers or hopes of his

PSALM LXVII.

A prayer for mercy, and call to praise.

¶ TO THE CHIEF MUSICIAN ON [a] NEGINOTH, A PSALM OR SONG.

GOD be merciful unto us, and bless us; and cause his face to shine * upon us.[†] Selah.[‡]

2 That thy way[§] may be known upon earth, thy saving health among all nations.

3 Let the people praise thee, O God; let all the people praise thee.

4 O let the nations be glad, and sing for joy; for thou shalt judge the people righteously, and [‖] govern the nations upon earth.* Selah.

5 Let the people praise thee, O God; let all the people praise thee.

6 Then shall the earth yield her increase; and God, even our own God, shall bless us.

7 God shall bless us; and all the ends of the earth shall fear him.

PSALM LXVIII.

A Psalm of victory and triumph.

¶ TO THE CHIEF MUSICIAN, A PSALM OR SONG OF DAVID.

LET God arise,* let his enemies be scattered: let them also that hate him flee [†] before him.

2 As smoke is driven away, so drive them away: as wax melteth before the fire, so let the wicked perish [‡] at the presence of God.

3 But let the righteous be glad; let them rejoice before God: yea, let them [§] exceedingly rejoice.

4 Sing unto God, sing praises to his name: extol him that rideth [‖] upon the heavens * by his name JAH,[†] and rejoice before him.

5 A father of the fatherless, and a judge of the widows, is God in his holy habitation.

6 God setteth the solitary [‡] in families: he bringeth out those which are bound with chains: [§] but the rebellious dwell in a dry land.

7 O God, when thou wentest forth before thy people, when thou didst march through the wilderness; Selah: [‖]

8 [a] The earth shook, the heavens also dropped * at the presence of God: even Sinai itself was moved at the presence of God, the God of Israel.

people. Wherever they may be in the world, they have equal access to him as their trust and salvation. Everywhere in the works of nature we may discern the power, wisdom, goodness, and greatness of God. And everything we receive from mountains, from seas, from luminaries, from rains, from pastures, from fields, ought, with thankful admiration and praise, to be received as his gift. But in these let me discern, as in a figure, how he establishes his church, his ordinances, and his people. He limits, restrains, and directs their raging troubles. He enlightens, by the word of his grace, and the influences of his Spirit. And while Jesus, the Sun of Righteousness, rises with healing under his wings, his showers of gospel declarations and spiritual influences drop down abundantly, for the nourishment, satisfaction, and joy of his ransomed ones.

REFLECTIONS UPON PSALM LXVI.—With cordiality and joy ought all men to celebrate the praises of that God who is so great, and so good to all. And as our fathers' sins should awaken our sorrows, their mercies should inflame our praise. But quickly shall antichristians, and other enemies of our all-governing Lord Jesus, be made to bow, or be destroyed before him! All the trials of churches or saints, their support and protection in them, and the happy issue of them, ought, and shall be, matter of cordial and lasting praise: and to make vows in an evangelical manner, when under trouble, is truly commendable; but much care must always be taken for the speedy and exact performance of them. To testify our gratitude to God, and to encourage others in his way, we ought prudently to communicate our most noted experiences of his goodness and grace. No duty, performed amidst indulged wickedness, can be acceptable to God. But such as in faith pour out their hearts unto God, without any allowed guile, may now begin their praises and thanksgiving, in the confidence that their requests are accepted, and shall in due time be answered.

REFLECTIONS UPON PSALM LXVII.—God's mercy is the spring and matter of all the blessings we need. His favour manifested is our whole joy and comfort. And the more kindness he bestows upon any person or church, the more they wish his gospel and kingdom to spread. His method of redeeming and saving men through Christ is health to their soul, and marrow to their bones. It is an unspeakable mercy to be judged and governed according to the gospel and covenant of grace. The service of Christ is the freedom and happiness of his people; and his government introduces the most inestimable benefits and exalted praises. What a harvest of converted souls the world yields when he pours forth his influences! And blessings innumerable flow from a new covenant relation to God as our God: while reverential love and holy obedience always attend the firm faith thereof.

PSALM LXIX.

¶ TO THE CHIEF MUSICIAN UPON SHOSHANNIM, A PSALM OF DAVID.

SAVE me,* O God; for the waters are come in unto my soul.

2 I sink in deep mire, where there is no standing: I am come into deep waters, where the floods overflow me.

3 I am weary of my crying: my throat is dried: mine eyes fail while I wait for my God.

4 They that hate me without a cause are more than the hairs of mine head: they that would destroy me, being mine enemies wrongfully, are mighty: then I restored that which I took not away.†

5 O God, thou knowest my foolishness; and my sins‡ are not hid from thee.

See especially ver. 9, first clause, comp. with John 2. 17, also ver. 9, second clause, with Rom. 15. 3, and ver. 25. also with John 19. 28; and surely it is impossible to doubt that Christ is the speaker of the whole Psalm! REFLECTIONS UPON PSALM LXVIII.—No hatred, no opposition, of men or devils, could exclude our Redeemer from his glory. However strong or obstinate his enemies, they are easily ruined by his power. But happy—thrice happy are they who have this high Sovereign, this glorious, this gracious JEHOVAH to be their God! Behold how he protects his afflicted church and people; raises up families of saints in our Gentile world; delivers the prisoners of sin and Satan from their chains of corruptions and curses! and abandons obstinate transgressors to eternal ruin! Behold him leading up his people from their spiritual bondage, and by his word and Spirit directing them in their paths! By his almighty influence he brought down all opposition. By showers of gospel truths and spiritual influences he quickened the dead, and refreshed the weary souls. By the multitudes of his apostles and ministers he published the glad tidings of salvation. By his grace he washed poor hell-enslaved sinners in his blood, and adorned them with his righteousness and grace. He established his church firm and high as mountains which cannot be moved, and from which he will never depart. While angelic hosts are her guard, the ascending Redeemer is her conquering Head, her Treasury, and Almoner. How great are his triumphs, his grace, his glory! Never pardoned rebel owed such gratitude to his generous prince as every pardoned sinner owes to his Lord. Never is he weary of showing mercy. And even death is disarmed to them who have an interest in him and his salvation. But dreadful is the fate of obstinate Jews, and others, who oppose the designs of his grace: and behold, when he went forth, in the ordinances of the gospel, by his apostles and other missionaries, how Jews and Gentiles saw his glory, sang his praise, and submitted themselves to his government!

7 Because for thy sake [a] I have borne reproach; shame hath covered my face.

8 [b] I am become a stranger unto my brethren, and an alien unto my mother's children.

9 [c] For the zeal of thine house hath eaten [*] me up; [d] and the reproaches of them that reproached thee are fallen upon me.

15 Let not the water-flood overflow me, neither let the deep swallow me up, and let not [n] the pit shut her mouth [‡] upon me.

16 Hear me, O LORD; [o] for thy lovingkindness is good: turn unto me, [p] according to the multitude of thy tender mercies.

17 [q] And hide not thy face from thy servant; for I am in trouble: [§] hear me speedily.

19 Thou hast known my [t] reproach, and my shame, and my dishonour: [u] mine adversaries are all before thee.

23 [b] Let their eyes be darkened, that they see not; and make their loins continually to shake.

24 [c] Pour out thine indignation upon them, and let thy wrathful anger take hold of them.

25 Let [§] their habitation be desolate; and [‖] let none dwell in their tents.

26 [d] For they persecute him whom thou hast smitten; and they talk to the grief of [*] those whom thou hast wounded.

27 Add [] iniquity unto their iniquity; [] and let them not come into thy righteousness.

28 Let them be blotted out of the book of the living, and not be written with the righteous

29 But I am poor and sorrowful: let thy salvation, O God, set me up on high.

30 I will praise the name of God with a song, and will magnify him with thanksgiving.

33 For the LORD heareth the poor, and despiseth not his prisoners. [‡]

34 Let the heaven and earth praise him, the seas, and every thing that [f] moveth therein:

35 For God will save Zion, and will build the cities of Judah; that they may dwell there, and have it in possession.

* This Psalm exemplifies the two chief principles for interpretation of the Psalms, viz. 1. Quotation and exposition in the New Testament. 2. PSALM LXX.

A prayer for help and deliverance.

TO THE CHIEF MUSICIAN. A PSALM OF DAVID, a TO BRING TO REMEMBRANCE.

MAKE haste, O God, to deliver me; * make haste † to help me, O LORD.

2 [b] Let them be ashamed and confounded that seek after my soul; let them be turned backward, and put to confusion, that desire my hurt.

3 Let them be turned back for a reward of their shame that say, Aha, aha!

4 Let all those that seek thee rejoice and be glad in thee: and let such as love thy salvation say continually, Let God be magnified.

5 [c] But I am poor and needy: make haste unto me, O God: thou art my help and my deliverer; O LORD, make no tarrying.

PSALM LXXI.

* A sinner is to be delivered only in mercy—the sin-bearing Saviour, alone in righteousness. By this mark it is evident, that if the speaker was guided by the spirit of knowledge, a point not to be doubted, he must be the Christ.—ED.

IN thee, O LORD, do I put my trust: let me never be put to confusion.

2 Deliver me in thy righteousness, * and cause me to escape: incline thine ear unto me, and save me.

3 [a] Be thou my strong habitation, whereunto I may continually resort: thou hast given commandment to save me; for thou art my rock and my fortress.

4 [b] Deliver me, O my God, out of the hand

REFLECTIONS UPON PSALM LXIX.—While I read these things, let me, with deep concern, by faith behold my Redeemer charged in law with my sins, and bearing their punishment. Let me learn with patience to run the race of holy obedience, and of necessary trials, set before me, looking to Jesus as my pattern, and as the author and finisher of my faith. While I behold the tremendous severity of God's judgments against his ancient people, for rejecting and murdering his Son, let me not be high-minded, but fear.—Let me behold the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ, who, though he was rich, yet for our sakes became poor, that we through his poverty might be made rich.—And let me be a living and lively member of that church which is founded in his blood, and blessed in him with all spiritual blessings.

REFLECTIONS UPON PSALM LXX.—While here also I behold Jesus Christ in great abasement, poverty, and distress, denouncing just and fearful punishment on his Jewish, heathen, antichristian, and other enemies; and interceding for the joy and happiness of his friends; to his Father's honour, let me apply these of the wicked, out of the hand of the unrighteous and cruel man.

5 For thou art my hope, O Lord GOD: thou art my trust from my youth.

6 [c] By thee have I been holden up from the womb: thou art he that took me out of my mother's bowels: my praise shall be continually of thee.

7 I am as a wonder unto many:* but thou art my strong refuge.

8 [d] Let my mouth be filled with thy praise and with thy honour all the day.

9 Cast me not off in the time of old age;† forsake me not when my strength faileth.

10 For mine enemies speak against me; and they that ‡ lay wait for my soul take counsel together, 11 Saying, God hath forsaken him: persecute and take him; for there is none to deliver him.

12 O [e] God, be not far from me: O my God, make haste for my help.

13 Let them be confounded and consumed that are adversaries to my soul;§ let them be covered with reproach and dishonour that seek my hurt.

14 But I will hope continually, and will yet praise thee more and more.

15 [f] My mouth shall show forth thy righteousness and thy salvation all the day; for I know not‖ the numbers thereof.

16 I will go in the strength of the Lord GOD: I will make mention of thy righteousness, even of thine only.

17 O God, thou hast taught me from my youth; and hitherto [g] have I declared thy wondrous works.

18 Now also [h] when I am old and grayheaded, O God, forsake me not;* until I have showed ¶ thy strength unto this generation, and thy power to every one that is to come.†

19 [k] Thy righteousness also, O God, is very high, who hast done great things: O God, who is like unto thee?

20 Thou, which hast showed me great and sore troubles, shalt quicken me again, and shalt bring me up again from the depths of the earth.‡

21 Thou shalt increase my greatness, and comfort me on every side.§

22 [l] I will also praise thee‖ with the psaltery, even thy truth, O my God: unto thee will I sing with the harp, O thou [m] Holy One of Israel.

23 [n] My lips shall greatly rejoice when I sing unto thee; and my soul, which thou hast redeemed.

24 My tongue also shall talk of thy righteousness all the day long: for they are confounded, [o] for they are brought unto shame, that seek my hurt.*

¶ A PSALM * FOR SOLOMON.

GIVE * the king thy judgments, O God, and thy righteousness unto the king's son.[1]

2 [b] He shall judge thy people with righteousness, and thy poor with judgment.

3 The mountains shall bring peace to the people, and the little hills, by righteousness.

4 [c] He shall judge the poor of the people, he shall save the children of the needy, and [d] shall break in pieces the oppressor.

5 They shall fear thee as long as the sun and moon endure, throughout all generations.[1]

6 [e] He shall come down like rain upon the mown grass; as showers that water the earth.

7 In his days shall the righteous flourish; and abundance of peace § so long as the ‖ moon endureth.

8 [f] He shall have dominion also from sea to sea, and from the river unto the ends of the earth.

9 They that dwell in the wilderness shall bow before him; and his enemies shall lick the dust.

10 The kings of Tarshish and of the isles shall bring presents: the kings of Sheba and Seba shall offer gifts.

11 Yea, [g] all kings shall fall down before him; all nations shall serve him.*

12 For he shall deliver the needy when he crieth; the poor also, and him that hath no helper.

13 He shall spare the poor and needy, and shall save the souls of the needy.

14 [h] He shall redeem their soul from deceit and violence: and precious shall their blood be in his sight.

15 And he shall live, and to him † shall be given of the gold of Sheba: prayer also shall be made for him continually; ‡ and daily shall he be praised.

d Job 8. 21. Ps. 104. 33. & 145. 2. & 146. 2.

† Inasmuch as our Lord died, literally young, this verse is supposed necessarily to indicate another speaker. But old age is not absolute, but comparative. Thus it is common to speak of premature old age, a fact evidently true of our Lord, whom a little after 30, the Jews supposed 50. The period referred to, when, as in old age, his strength failed, seems literally, that when worn out with sleeplessness, buffetings, and scourgings, and, tottering under his cross, Simon of Cyrene was compelled to carry it. * Better, as in the margin, "Now also unto old age and gray hairs, O God, forsake me not." That our Lord was, in the ordinary acceptation of the word, prematurely old—consumed by his zeal—both himself and the Jews testified. Nor is any thing more probable, that his incessant sorrows had produced, what sorrow has often produced—premature gray hairs, the snows of an unnatural winter enshrouding the greenness of spring.—ED.

§ This is surely not descriptive of David's expectations or experience. God had positively told him, "the sword should never depart from his house," (2 Sam. 12. 10, 11.) and, from that hour onwards, his whole life was a succession of troubles. But of Jesus the description is true; for his declarative greatness is ever increasing, and "the joy set before him" was his sun of comfort in the darkest hour of sorrows.—ED.

† The strict parallelism of the opening of this with the 2d Psalm, and the New Testament application of that Psalm to Christ, necessarily leads to a similar application here. things to my own troubled circumstances, and so, in a believing manner, bring them, and the sinful causes thereof, to my remembrance. Urgent trials should always awaken fervent prayers.

REFLECTIONS UPON PSALM LXXI.—They who know God and his faithfulness and grace, will with comfort and confidence be engaged to trust him in every time of need. The more we reflect on what God hath done for us, it will the more engage our trust and animate our praise. In the depth of our misery God delights to magnify his mercy. And they who confidently plead his faithfulness shall never be disappointed. In old age we must expect infirmities; but God can give an increase of faith and patience to bear them. His aged servants are never cast off by him: but when they experience most weakness, they shall most assuredly experience abundant support in time of need. He may afflict his people, but can never reject them. Their enemies may boast in vain a while, but just ruin shall reward them at last. Happy they whose grand supports are the power and promise of God, and whose early and long continued experience of his favours encourages them to maintain their hopes, and increase in their holiness. And if we hope for eternal happiness, let us do what we can to spread the honour and good savour of Christ on earth! For how becoming is it for aged saints to be remarkable in cheerfully expecting good at the hand of God; and to have heart, and lips, and life, all filled with his praise! How pleasant is it to step as it were into heaven, scarcely needing to change either our work or our song!

TRULY [†]God is good to Israel,[‡] even to such as are of a clean heart.

2 But as for me, my feet were almost gone, my steps had well nigh slipped.[§]

3 For I was envious[‖] at the foolish, when I saw the prosperity of the wicked:

REFLECTIONS UPON PSALM LXXII.—Behold how Jesus Christ, endowed with the Holy Ghost above measure, and with all power in heaven and earth, reigns over his gospel church! In infinite equity and wisdom he conducts his whole administration. By his righteousness he purchased, by his intercession he procures, and by his word, ordinances, and Spirit, he confers on men peace with God, peace in the conscience, and with one another. Poor destitute sinners he supplies from his fulness of blessings, and delivers them from the hand of sin, Satan, and the world, their oppressors. His spiritual influences, coming down in their season, shall render his subjects flourishing and fruitful in holiness. And how extensive his gospel church, comprehending both Jews and Gentiles—the wildest Arabs and most distant islanders not excepted! In it persons of every station, but chiefly of the poor, submit to his yoke, and devote themselves, and all that they have, to his service. Earnest are their prayers for his presence and power in his ordinances, and for his coming in the clouds; and high their songs of praise to his name. What commendations of him are in the word of the gospel! From him the corn of wheat, sown in death upon Calvary, and from the handful of gospel truth, sown among hardened hearts, shall proceed converts, strong and tall in grace as the cedars of Lebanon, and numerous as the piles of grass. How lasting is his kingdom, and how certainly useful for diffusing every spiritual blessing among his accursed brethren of mankind! United to his person, and sharing of his benefits, let us wish well to his interests and honour, and admire, adore, and praise, JEHOVAH in him, as the author of all the wonders of providence and grace.

REFLECTIONS UPON PSALM LXXIII.—In our perplexing difficulties we ought to recur to the first principles of our most holy faith. And never should we lose the views of God's kindness to those who are washed in the blood, and sanctified by the Spirit, of his Son. Often the strongest believers are most violently tempted, and dragged to the very brink of death and destruction; while God, in this world, marks his enemies and friends in the most perplexing manner. Whom he hates he prospers to their ruin; and whom he loves he corrects and scourges for their profit. What need then have we to attend closely to his word as our rule; and amidst perplexing providences to wait till we see the end of the Lord! The worst that a good man hath is better than the prosperity of many wicked, which but ripens them for everlasting ruin, and hastens them into it. But whatever sad lengths the afflictions and temptations of the godly draw them, they will issue in their instruction, humiliation, comfort, and holiness. When atheistical thoughts arise in our hearts, they must be carefully and quickly suppressed. We must never grieve nor stumble the children of God by representing his service as vain and unprofitable. And it is not the strongest carnal reasoning, but fellowship with God in his word and ordinances, that can illuminate a darkened soul, or disentangle from an ensnaring temptation. Great is the mercy when God relieves his children, who had, by their envy and fretfulness, become their own tormentors; and that even at their worst he never ceases to attend and support them, as weak infants in his family. But bright views of God and eternal things are sometimes ushered in by great darkness and trouble of mind. Holiness here, and glory hereafter, are closely connected. And little reason hath one, guided of God, and an heir of everlasting happiness, nay, of God himself, and a joint heir with Christ, to envy the earthly happiness of the wicked. How insignificant other things appear when compared with the everlasting enjoyment of the INFINITE ALL, the REDEEMING GODHEAD! How light and easy are death and trouble when considered as our way to it! While apostates from God hasten towards

PSALM LXXIV.

A prayer for deliverance from oppression.

¶ [a] MASCHIL OF ASAPH.

2 Remember thy congregation, which thou hast purchased of old; the [c] rod of thine inheritance, [†] which thou hast redeemed; this mount Zion, wherein thou hast dwelt.

3 Lift up thy feet [‡] unto the perpetual desolations; even all [d] that the enemy hath done wickedly in the sanctuary.

4 Thine enemies roar in the midst of thy congregations; they set up their ensigns for signs.

5 A man was famous according as he had lifted up axes upon the thick trees.[§]

6 But now they break down the carved work thereof at once with axes and hammers.

7 [e] They have cast fire into thy sanctuary; they have defiled by casting down the dwelling-place of thy name to the ground.

8 They said in their hearts, Let us [‖] destroy them together: they have burnt up all the synagogues of God in the land.

9 We see not our signs: [*] there is no more any prophet; [†] neither is there among us any that knoweth how long.

PSALM LXXV.

A song of praise.

¶ TO THE CHIEF MUSICIAN, [a] AL-TASCHITH, A PSALM OR SONG [*] OF ASAPH.

UNTO thee, O God, do we give thanks, unto thee do we give thanks: for that thy name [†] is near thy wondrous works declare.

2 [‡] When I shall receive the congregation I will judge uprightly.

3 [b] The earth and all the inhabitants thereof are dissolved: I bear up the pillars of it. [§] Selah.[‖]

4 I said unto the fools, [*] Deal not foolishly; and to the wicked, [c] Lift not up the horn: [†]

5 Lift not up your horn on high: [‡] speak not with a stiff neck.

6 For promotion cometh neither from the east, nor from the [§] south;

7 [d] But God is the judge: he putteth down one, and setteth up another.

8 For in the hand of the LORD there is a cup, and the wine is red; it is full of mixture; and he poureth out of the same: but the dregs thereof, all the wicked of the earth shall wring them out, and drink them.

9 But I will declare for ever; I will sing praises to the God of Jacob.[‖]

10 All the horns of the wicked also will I cut off; but the horns of the righteous shall be exalted.

endless perdition, let me therefore draw near to him, in habitual fellowship with him. Let me by faith depend on his promise, that here and hereafter my lips may be filled with his praise.

REFLECTIONS UPON PSALM LXXIV.—Alas! to what melancholy apprehensions of their state and case are the people of God sometimes reduced! They fear that the rod of his correction is the sword of his vengeance. But though he cast them down, he will never utterly cast them off. They who are redeemed by Jesus' blood shall never perish under the bondage of corruption. The favours which they have received are a presage, and ought to be made a plea, for greater. While worldly minds feel only worldly crosses, the interests of religion, and welfare of the church, are incomparably dearest to the children of God. And however certain the ruin, which will fall upon the destroyers of his church at last, it is extremely affecting to behold them making havock of God's truths, ordinances, or people, while there is none to comfort us, or to explain the dark providences. But under sore troubles it is proper to commemorate, and plead upon, God's former and distinguished mercies. He who divided the Red sea, and destroyed Pharaoh and his host, and who brought waters from the rock for Israel; he, who is the Sovereign of nature, can, at his pleasure, command our and his church's deliverance. Importunate wrestlings and pleadings with God for the relief of his church, which is so dear to him, and for fulfilling his promise, of which he is ever mindful, and for destroying his daring and implacable reproachers, will not be long unanswered.

REFLECTIONS UPON PSALM LXXV.—While we think of Jesus Christ, whom God has marvellously crowned with glory and honour, and of the infinite danger of opposing his government, let us remark what wonderful works of God have been exercised to us-ward. Great is the praise which we owe to God on every review of his mercies. Important and useful is the charge which is committed to magistrates and ministers: and there is great need of activity and care in their administrations, as they must be accountable to God, from whom they received their power. One true patriot may sometimes save a disjointed church or state from impending ruin. But vain and dangerous is it to withstand God's deputies. The righteous shall be advanced and flourish, while obstinate sinners shall be plunged into everlasting misery.

REFLECTIONS UPON PSALM LXXVI.—Happy are those nations and churches which have the knowledge and presence of God in them! How profitable, pleasant, and enriching! Gloriously he protects them in danger, and destroys their enemies, however mighty or numerous. Their tyrannical oppressors, though like mountains of prey, shall be destroyed by his hand. His meek ones must indeed patiently wait a while; but at last he will, to the terror of all around, appear for their relief. Whatever his people suffer shall but brighten their graces, and redound to his glory. And whatever of his enemies' fury hath not this tendency he restrains. The more awful our God and our deliverances are, the more ought we to wait on him, fear him, and make and pay grateful vows to him.

REFLECTIONS UPON PSALM LXXVII.—What days of trouble saints have to endure, from temptations, corruptions, afflictions, and desertions! But in distress we must flee to the compassionate bosom of our God, and pour out our complaints before him. And if we would speed, we must be both importunate and unwearied in our application. If we but speak in groans, God can understand us, and will answer. But often, under strong temptations, saints feed their sorrows, and reject the consolations which God suggests to them in his word: often they indulge the melancholy apprehension that he hath forsaken them, and left them to eternal perdition. Terrible then is their case: and dishonourable to God is this their distrust. But hopeful is the appearance when they are brought to

[h] and not forget the works of God, but keep his commandments:

8 And might not be [i] as their fathers, a stubborn and rebellious generation; a generation [*] that set not their heart aright, and whose spirit was not stedfast[†] with God.

9 The children of Ephraim,[‡] being armed, and [§] carrying bows, [k] turned back in the day of battle.

10 [l] They kept not the covenant of God, and refused to walk in his law;

11 [m] And forgat his works, and his wonders that he had showed them.

12 [n] Marvellous things did he in the sight of their fathers, in the land of Egypt, in the field of [o] Zoan.

13 [p] He divided the sea, and caused them to pass through; and he made the waters to stand as an heap.

14 [q] In the day-time also he led them with a cloud, and all the night with a light of fire.

15 [r] He clave the rocks in the wilderness, and gave them drink as out of the great depths.

16 He brought [s]streams also out of the rock, and caused waters to run down like rivers.

17 [t] And they sinned yet more against him, by provoking the most High in the wilderness.

18 [u] And they tempted God in their heart, by asking meat for their lust.

19 Yea, they spake against God; they said, [x] Can God [‖] furnish a table in the wilderness?

20 [y] Behold, he smote the rock, that the waters gushed out, and the streams overflowed; can he give bread also? can he provide flesh for his people?

21 Therefore the LORD heard this, and [z] was wroth; so a fire[*] was kindled against Jacob, and anger also came up against Israel;

22 Because [a] they believed not in God, and trusted not in his salvation;

23 Though he [b] had commanded the clouds from above, and opened the [c] doors of heaven, 24 [d] And had rained down manna upon them to eat, and had given them of the corn of heaven.

25 [e] Man did eat angels'[†] food: he sent them meat to the full.

26 He caused an east wind [‡] to blow in the heaven; and by his power he brought in the south wind.

27 He rained flesh also upon them as dust, and [§] feathered fowls like as the sand of the sea;

28 And he let it fall in the midst of their camp, round about their habitations.

29 So they did eat, and were well filled: for he gave them their own desire;

30 They were not estranged from their lust: but while their meat was yet in their mouths,

31 The wrath of God came upon them, and slew the fattest of them, and [*] smote down the [†] chosen men of Israel.

32 For all this they sinned still, and believed not for his wondrous works.[‡]

33 Therefore their days did he consume in vanity, and their years in trouble.

34 [r] When he slew them, then they sought him; [§] and they returned and inquired early after God:

35 And they remembered that God was their Rock, and the high God their Redeemer.

36 Nevertheless they did flatter him with their mouth, and they lied unto him with their tongues.

37 For their heart was not right with him, neither were they stedfast in his covenant.

38 But he, being full of compassion, forgave their iniquity, and destroyed them not; yea, many a time turned he his anger away, and did not stir up all his wrath.

39 For he remembered that they were but flesh; a wind that passeth away, and cometh not again.

40 How oft did they [‖] provoke him in the wilderness, and grieve him in the desert!

41 Yea, they turned back[*] and tempted God, and limited[†] the Holy One of Israel.

42 They remembered not his hand, nor the day when he delivered them [‡] from the enemy.

43 How he had [§] wrought his signs in Egypt, and his wonders in the field of Zoan;

44 And had turned their rivers into blood; and their floods, that they could not drink.

45 He sent divers sorts of flies among them, which devoured[‖] them; and [s] frogs, which destroyed them.

46 He gave also their increase unto the caterpillar,[*] and their labour unto the locust.

47 He [†] destroyed their vines with hail, and their sycamore-trees[‡] with [§] frost.

48 [h] He gave up their cattle also to the hail, and their flocks to [‖] hot thunderbolts.

49 He cast upon them the fierceness of his anger, wrath, and indignation, and trouble, by sending evil angels[*] among them.

50 [†] He made a way to his anger; he spared not their soul from death, but gave [‖] their life over to the pestilence;

REFLECTIONS UPON PSALM LXXVIII.—Important are the great things of God's law, and the matters of our eternal salvation; and they demand the most serious attention. With great care ought parents to instruct children in the knowledge of the great truths and works of God. Neglect of this issues in children's unbelief, hypocrisy, and lasting ruin. And to avoid the bad effects of parents' guilt, children of wicked men ought to be doubly careful to avoid imitating them. How weak men are when God is their enemy; and how cowardly when their consciences are burdened with guilt! No miracles, however gracious and striking, can melt an ignorant and hardened heart, or induce it to gratitude. No favours will satisfy a discontented spirit, and restrain its malicious murmurings against God. With amazing patience and kindness God provides for his abusers amongst mankind! But when he gratifies sinners in their requests, his gifts become their snare and curse: this world's abundance is abused to excess: reflection is banished: and men hurry headlong into ruin. They who make a god of their belly, will find their end to be destruction: and they, who will not be bowed by mercies or corrections, must be broken by judgments. If sin be indulged, sorrow must follow. Nor shall the stoutest be able to resist the uplifted arm of an angry God. Troubles often force men to their profession, prayers, or tears, whose wickedness is quickly thereafter discovered. The danger is scarcely blown over when all their convictions and promises are forgotten and contemned.—O the infinite compassion and patience of God towards his professing people! But, alas! his most singular favours and tremendous judgments are soon forgotten and despised!—The creatures of God, when armed with his wrath, in the most fearful manner cover his enemies with ruin. But abundant returns of thankfulness, love, and service, are due to him from those to whom he has been liberal of his favours. How ready are most to imitate their wicked progenitors, to the dishonour of their gracious God! But more fearfully criminal is the unfaithfulness of those who profess to serve him; it draws tremendous destruction upon the transgressors. If we forsake God, he will forsake us; and no tabernacle, no formalities in religion, can avail us when he is departed.—But however sharply he corrects his own people, he hath still mercy in store for them. They who triumph over them a little shall quickly have their glory turned to shame: and he will maintain a church to himself for ever. If to punish one nation, he remove their gospel candlestick, he will send the light of his truth to another, and often the most unlikely. And not David, but Jesus Christ, shall for ever feed God's flock of ransomed men, according to the integrity of his heart and good skill of his hands.

REFLECTIONS UPON PSALM LXXIX.—To what fearful and lasting distress and desolation is the church of God sometimes brought, while forced to bear at once the cruelty and derision of men, and the manifested displeasure of God! But he will assuredly visit with his wrath such as live in ignorance of him, and neglect of his worship. And though he permit his people to be oppressed for a while, he will speedily avenge them of their persecutors; and often their extremity ushers in their deliverance. Humble prayers for forgiveness, poured forth in sighs and groans, and attended with deep concern for God's dishonour, will not be long unanswered. And deliverances, founded in pardon through Jesus' blood, will animate to cordial praise and thankfulness.

REFLECTIONS UPON PSALM LXXX.—Great is the mercy, that God is the Shepherd, Leader, and Protector of his people—that he is a God reconciled in Christ, to the everlasting wonder of angels and men—and that now it is not the Jewish tribes, who marched after the ark in the desert, but multitudes of Gentiles, that see his salvation. Awakened souls ardently desire reconciliation with God, and repeated manifestations of his favour. And if we are turned to God by his grace, we cannot fail to inherit his eternal glory. But through seeming rejection of prayers, and angry frowns from God, and through tears, griefs, and reproaches must we sometimes go thither. With what kind care did God settle the Israelites in Canaan, and make them flourish there! With how much more did he gather, found, and increase his gospel church! But, alas! the misery and ruin that sin draws down upon the best constituted churches and nations! Enemies, furious as wild beasts, waste them when God withdraws his protection. Yet the design hereof is not his people's ruin; but to excite their prayers, quicken their repentance, and magnify the wonders of his power and grace in their deliverance. It is impossible for his church to be ruined when her help is laid on her Almighty Redeemer, the man of God's right hand. God's regard to him is the source of all our salvation, quickening, and perseverance in grace. Through him strengthening us, we can do all things. No wonder then that prayer is the daily employment of such as are spiritually alive; and that a sense of God's favour is more earnestly desired than the removal of any affliction.

REFLECTIONS UPON PSALM LXXXI.—God's saving relations are a delightful foundation of our warmest praise. Deliverances from God, as well as his authoritative command, oblige us to a punctual observance of his ordinances of worship. And nothing can do it more effectually than our eternal redemption through Christ. How ready is God to help and to save those who call upon him in trouble! And all our obedience is delightfully founded on his gospel grant of himself to us as OUR GOD. His service must then be our highest interest as well as duty. Past obligations are sufficient to engage our hearts, even though we had no future promises in view. And when God grants himself and his fulness, our desires or prayers for enjoyment can never be too much enlarged. They only, who have him for their portion, have all that heart can wish. But how terrible is the punishment of a wilful refusal of his gracious offers! What loss of victory over enemies, of perpetuated enjoyments, and of delightful provision! Alas! what enemies are sinners to their own souls! And they, who resist God's word and Spirit, have only their own wilfulness to blame when their destruction comes. Their perishing is not through want of compassion in God, but through the hardness and impenitence of their own hearts.

REFLECTIONS UPON PSALM LXXXII.—Dignified is the office of magistrates, as the deputies of God. And with solemn awe and strict equity ought they to fix their decisions, as in God's presence, and as accountable to him. Yet how commonly do they indulge themselves in injustice and partiality! For want of substance to procure right to themselves, the poor are ordinarily trampled on; but God is their guardian; and, let magistrates do their worst, he will at last redress the grievances of his poor ones. The high station and mighty influence of magistrates shall not long protect them from death; nor, if wicked, from damnation. If our rulers then be wicked, let us give ourselves to prayer, that God may rectify matters, and subdue the world to the righteous government of his Son.

REFLECTIONS UPON PSALM LXXXIII.—To quicken his people's importunity in prayer, the Lord sometimes appears for a time to disregard their distress. Whatever pretences men make for their opposition to God's people, the real cause is their enmity against God himself, whose holiness they cannot endure, and whose image they cannot but hate. But, while saints are hid with Christ in God, no enemy can really hurt them. Wicked men, though diversified by nations, humours, or interests, strongly unite in opposing the cause of God and truth. Glad would they be if neither preacher nor professor of the true religion were left upon earth. But, though craft be employed to seduce, threatenings to intimidate, and fury to extirpate, the foundation of God standeth sure. God knoweth them that are his, and they shall never be moved. At the worst, they have their all-sufficient Lord to flee to, who can check the madness of the devourers. And past interpositions of God, in favour of his people, should encourage us to plead and hope for the like mercy. All opposition to God and his church is but rushing headlong into certain ruin. Even in this life, sinners' terrors of mind often make their life a burden, and are a presage of more dreadful misery in hell for ever. Men must know at last that the Lord omnipotent reigneth; and the execution of deserved vengeance on the ungodly will tend to his everlasting glory. Meanwhile, we ought to long for the conviction and conversion of our bitterest enemies of mankind, rather than their destruction.

PSALM LXXXV.

A record of mercy and judgment, with prayer for revival.

¶ TO THE CHIEF MUSICIAN, A PSALM [a] FOR THE SONS OF KORAH.

LORD, [b] thou hast been [*] favourable unto thy land: thou hast brought back the captivity of Jacob.

2 Thou hast forgiven the iniquity of thy people: thou hast covered all their sin.[†] Selah.[‡]

3 Thou hast taken away all thy wrath: [§] thou hast turned thyself from the fierceness of thine anger.

4 Turn us, O God of our salvation, and cause thine anger toward us to cease.

5 [c] Wilt thou be angry with us for ever? wilt thou draw out thine anger to all generations?[‖]

6 Wilt thou not revive us again, that thy people may rejoice in thee?

7 Show us thy mercy, O LORD, and grant us thy salvation.

8 I will hear [*] what God the LORD will speak: [d] for he will speak peace unto his people, and to his saints: but let them not turn again to folly.

9 [e] Surely his salvation is nigh them that fear him; that [f] glory may dwell in our land.

10 [g] Mercy and truth are met together; righteousness and peace have kissed each other.

13 Righteousnes shall go before him; and shall set us in the way of his steps.

PSALM LXXXVI.

A prayer in the day of trouble.

¶ [*] A PRAYER OF DAVID.

BOW down thine ear, O LORD, hear me: for [a] I am poor and needy.

2 Preserve my soul; for I am [†] holy: [‡] O thou my God, save thy servant that trusteth in thee.

3 Be merciful unto me, O LORD: [b] for I cry unto thee [§] daily.

4 Rejoice the soul of thy servant: for unto thee, O LORD, do [c] I lift up my soul.

5 For thou, LORD, art good, and ready to forgive; and plenteous in mercy unto all them that call upon thee.

6 [d] Give ear, O LORD, unto my prayer; and attend to the voice of my supplications.

7 [e] In the day of my trouble I will call upon thee: for thou wilt answer me.

8 Among the gods [‖] there is none like unto thee, O LORD; neither are there any works like unto thy works.

9 [f] All nations whom thou hast made shall come and worship before thee, O LORD; and shall glorify thy name.

10 For thou art great, and doest wondrous things: thou art God alone.[*]

11 Teach me thy way, O LORD; I will walk in thy truth: unite my heart [†] to fear thy name.

12 [g] I will praise thee, O LORD my God, with all my heart; and I will glorify thy name for evermore.

13 For great is thy mercy toward me; and thou hast delivered my soul from the lowest [‡] hell.[§]

[*] Even is not in the Hebrew. The words between yea and young, should rather be taken as a parenthesis, and the meaning stands thus —"My heart cries out for the living God, for thine altars, O Lord of hosts," &c. REFLECTIONS UPON PSALM LXXXIV.—What inexpressible beauty gracious souls see in holiness and in holy work! Fellowship with God in Christ, in his ordinances, is the delight, the desire of their soul. The meanest abode, with his presence and ordinances, is preferred to a palace without them. Not only faithful ministers, who attend to their work, but all who study a life of close fellowship with God, and faithful service of him, increase their joy in the Lord, and their strength for his work. If our heart be once engaged, we shall walk with pleasure in God's ways, and in attending his solemn ordinances. However troublesome the way to heaven be, not one of those, who truly set out, ever faint or miscarry. And O the inexpressible glories they there enjoy, in the immediate vision and presence of God! If he be our own and our father's God, we shall never seek him in vain. If he be our shield, we shall be safe from fear of evil. If our confidence towards him be founded solely on the merit and intercession of Jesus his Anointed, he cannot but behold us in mercy and love. Infinitely preferable is fellowship with God in his ordinances, to all the pleasures of sin or sense that can be enjoyed on earth: and happy are those who have God ALL IN ALL to them, bestowing ALL on them; and who, in all cases, depend for ALL they need only upon him.

REFLECTIONS UPON PSALM LXXXV.—Present distress should never obliterate the grateful memory of God's past favours. His pardons of sin, through Jesus' blood, are all free, full, and everlasting; and when guilt is removed, wrath ceases of course. Though our unfaithfulness may have plunged us into distress, God is rich in mercy, and ready to turn us to himself. But no salvation can be hoped for while we continue indulging our sins. And unless he save us freely, without respect to our deserts, we are undone for ever. Impenitent sinners must undergo eternal wrath; but the people of God are only corrected for a time. Having experienced the power of his quickening and restoring grace, they rejoice in God their Saviour, and speak, to his glory, of the wonders of his grace. And having expected and obtained an answer to their prayers, the peace which God speaks in his promise withdraws their heart from sinning. But how sure was the promise, near the fulfilment, and great the glory, of Jesus' incarnation and office! Herein the mercy, faithfulness, and equity of God appear harmoniously and brightly displayed. While Jesus, the truth, grows upward from earth, his righteous Father from heaven beholds him with pleasure. While the gospel, and its influences, take place among men, JEHOVAH manifests his righteousness in pardoning and blessing us with all spiritual blessings in Christ; in making us to abound in fruits of righteousness, to the praise of his glory; and in directing us to Jesus, and his law and example, that we may be led into the paths of everlasting peace.

PSALM LXXXIX.

A song of praise for covenant mercies, and of lamentation over divine desertions.

¶ MASCHIL OF ETHAN THE EZRAHITE.

I WILL sing of the mercies of the LORD for ever: with my mouth will I make known thy faithfulness to all generations.*

2 For I have said, Mercy shall be built up for ever: thy faithfulness shalt thou establish in the very heavens.

3 I have made a covenant with my chosen, I have sworn unto David my servant,†

* None but Messiah could confidently adopt the opening resolution and prophecy of this verse: of him, accordingly, it has been interpreted by Robbi Solomon, amongst the Jews; and by Aben Ezra, amongst Jewish converts to Christianity.—Ed.
† In this verse, the Father addresses the Son, whom he designates as "David my servant:" David signifies beloved, the name given to the Son by the Father from heaven; (Mat. 3. 17.) and the apostolic name by which his justifying grace is commended to the church. (Eph. 1. 6.) And that it applies here, not to David the son of Jesse, but to David's Lord, will appear certain from considering ver. 4, which applies not to the desolated throne of David in Jerusalem, but to the abiding throne of Messiah in glory.—Ed.
‡ See note on Ps. 3. 2.—Ed.

REFLECTIONS UPON PSALM LXXXVI.—While I here behold Jesus as the holy, but impoverished servant of his Father, imploring his favours, and triumphing in his praise, let me, in every case, pour forth importunate prayers; place all my confidence in God; lodge all my complaints and requests with him; and ascribe to him the glory of his own perfections, and of all my own and his people's deliverances.

REFLECTIONS UPON PSALM LXXXVII.—Behold how firmly and publicly our gospel church is founded upon Jesus Christ the Rock of ages! And how JEHOVAH delights in fellowship with his people in the public and private ordinances of his grace. Glorious things are spoken of her foundation, her ordinances, her members, her properties, her fulness. And, under the influence of almighty grace, the heathen nations on every side crowd into her. Behold also the exact and kind care which God takes of every true member! And great spiritual joy and rejoicing, and fresh springs of salvation, are found in her by the saints.

REFLECTIONS UPON PSALM LXXXVIII.—How inexpressibly grievous are the afflictions of some of God's principal favourites! nay, of his Son! Their sorrows are enlarged. They are reduced to the very brink of despair; loaded with a sense of divine wrath; deserted by friends; and, while their case is apparently remediless, their way lies along the brink of hell. If I be cast into this depth, let me, though with a trembling heart, still claim the Lord as my God, my Saviour. Let me, with fervent cries and humble expostulations, pour out my complaints into his bosom. The more my afflictions press me, let my supplications be the more pressing and persevering. And if I wish to live longer on earth, let my great end be to serve God's interests, and to show forth his praise.

8 O LORD God of hosts,* [a] who is a strong LORD like unto thee? or to thy faithfulness round about thee?

9 [b] Thou rulest the raging of the sea: when the waves thereof arise, thou stillest them.

10 Thou hast broken † Rahab‡ in pieces, as one that is slain; thou hast scattered thine enemies § with thy strong arm.

11 [c] The heavens are thine, the earth also is thine: as for the world, and the fulness thereof, thou hast founded them.

12 The north and the south thou hast created them: Tabor‖ and Hermon* shall [d] rejoice in thy name.

13 Thou hast [e] a mighty arm: strong is thy hand, and high is thy right hand.

14 Justice and judgment are the [f] habitation of thy throne; mercy and truth shall go before thy face.

15 Blessed is the people that know the [g] joyful sound: they shall walk, O LORD, in the light of thy countenance.†

16 [h] In thy name shall they rejoice all the day; and in thy righteousness shall they be exalted.

17 For [i] thou art the glory of their strength; and in thy favour our horn shall be exalted.

18 For [k] the LORD is our defence; and the Holy One of Israel is our King.‡

19 Then thou spakest in vision to thy Holy One, and saidst, [l] I have laid help upon one that is mighty; I have exalted one chosen out of the people.

20 I have found David§ my servant; with my holy oil have I anointed him:

21 [m] With whom my hand shall be established; mine arm also shall strengthen him.

22 [n] The enemy shall not exact upon him; nor the son of wickedness afflict him.

23 [o] And I will beat down his foes before his face, and plague them that hate him.

24 [p] But my faithfulness and my mercy shall be with him; [q] and in my name shall his horn be exalted.

25 [r] I will set his hand also in the sea, and his right hand in the rivers.

26 [s] He shall cry unto me, Thou art my Father, my God, and the Rock of my salvation.

27 Also I will make him my [t] first-born, higher than the kings of the earth.‖

28 [u] My mercy will I keep for him for evermore, and my covenant shall stand fast with him.

29 His seed also will I make to endure for ever, and his throne as the days of heaven.*

30 [x] If his children* forsake my law, and walk not in my judgments;

31 If they † break my statutes, and keep not my commandments;

32 [y] Then will I visit their transgression with the rod, and their iniquity with stripes.

33 Nevertheless my loving-kindness ‡ will I not utterly take from him, nor suffer my faithfulness § to fail.

34 My covenant will I not break, nor alter the thing that is gone out of my lips.

35 Once have I sworn by my holiness that I will not lie unto David.‖

36 [z] His seed shall endure for ever, and his throne as the sun before me.*

37 [a] It shall be established for ever as the moon,† and as a faithful witness in heaven. Selah.

38 But thou hast cast off and abhorred; thou hast been wroth with thine anointed.‡

39 [b] Thou hast made void the covenant of thy servant; thou hast profaned his crown, by casting it to the ground.

40 [c] Thou hast broken down all his hedges; thou hast brought his strong holds to ruin.

41 All that pass by the way spoil him: he is a reproach to his neighbours.

42 Thou hast set up the right hand of his adversaries; thou hast made all his enemies to rejoice.

43 Thou hast also turned the edge of his sword, and hast not made him to stand in the battle.

44 Thou hast made his § glory to cease, and cast his throne down to the ground.

45 [d] The days of his youth hast thou shortened; thou hast covered him with shame. Selah.

46 [e] How long, LORD? wilt thou hide thyself for ever? shall thy wrath burn like fire?

47 Remember how short my time is: wherefore hast thou made all men in vain?

48 [f] What man is he that liveth, and shall not see death? shall he deliver his soul from the hand of the grave? Selah.

49 LORD, where are thy former lovingkindnesses, which thou § swarest unto David in thy truth?

50 Remember, LORD, [h] the reproach of thy servants; how I do bear in my bosom the reproach of all the mighty people;

51 [i] Wherewith thine enemies have reproached,‖ O LORD; wherewith they have reproached the footsteps of thine anointed.

52 [k] Blessed be the LORD for evermore. Amen, and amen.

REFLECTIONS UPON PSALM LXXXIX.—Glorious is that covenant of grace which JEHOVAH has made with Jesus Christ, as the Head and Representative of an elect world. The mercy and faithfulness of God are therein for ever clearly and comfortably manifested; and for ever adored, both in heaven and earth. How infinite are the greatness and majesty of our covenant God! How unbounded his strength! No unruly elements in nature, nor outrageous nations of men, can control it. His dominion extends to all parts and ends of the earth; and in a powerful, steady, judicious, righteous, and merciful manner, he conducts ¶ [a] A PRAYER OF MOSES THE a MAN OF GOD.

A. M. cir. 2514. B. C. cir. 1490.

LORD, thou hast been our dwelling-place† ‡ in all generations.§

2 [b] Before the mountains were brought forth, or ever thou hadst formed the earth and the world, even from everlasting to everlasting, thou art God.

3 [c] Thou turnest man to destruction; and sayest, Return, ye children of men.‖

4 For a thousand years in thy sight are but as yesterday [*] when it is past, and as a watch in the night.

5 Thou carriest them away as with a flood; they are as a sleep: in the morning they are like grass which [†] groweth up.

6 [d] In the morning it flourisheth, and groweth up; in the evening it is cut down, and withereth.

7 For we are consumed by thine anger, and by thy wrath are we troubled.

8 Thou hast set our iniquities before thee, our secret sins in the light of thy countenance.

9 For all our days are [‡] passed away in thy wrath: we spend our years [e] as a tale§ that is told.

10 ‖ The days of our years are threescore years and ten; and if by reason of strength they be fourscore years, yet is their strength labour and sorrow: for it is soon cut off, and we fly away.

11 Who knoweth the power of thine anger? [*] even according to thy fear, so is thy wrath.

12 So teach us to number our days, that we may [f] apply our hearts unto wisdom.

13 Return, O LORD, how long? and let it repent thee concerning thy servants.†

14 O satisfy us early with thy mercy; that we may rejoice and be glad all our days.

15 Make us glad according to the days wherein thou hast afflicted us, and the years wherein we have seen evil.

16 Let thy work appear unto thy servants, and thy glory unto their children.‡

17 [g] And let the beauty of the LORD our God be upon us: and [h] establish thou the work of our hands upon us; yea, the work of our hands establish thou it.

PSALM XCI.

Trust in God, deliverance from snares, and protection from enemies.

A. M. cir. 2668. B. C. cir. 1016.

HE that dwelleth in the secret place* of the most High shall† abide under the shadow of the Almighty.

2 I will say‡ of the LORD, He is my refuge and my fortress: my God; in him will I trust.

3 Surely he shall deliver thee from the snare of the fowler, and from the noisome pestilence.

4 [a] He shall cover thee with his feathers, and under his wings§ shalt thou trust: his truth shall be thy shield and buckler.

5 Thou shalt not be afraid for the terror by night; nor for the arrow that flieth by day;

6 Nor for the pestilence that walketh in darkness; nor for the destruction that wasteth at noon-day.

7 A thousand shall fall at thy side, and ten thousand at thy right hand; but it shall not come nigh thee.

8 Only with thine eyes shalt thou behold, and see the reward of the wicked.

9 Because thou hast made the LORD which is my refuge,‖ even the most High, thy habitation;

10 There shall no evil befall thee, neither shall any plague come nigh thy dwelling.

11 For he shall give his angels charge over thee, to keep thee in all thy ways.*

12 They shall bear thee up in their hands, lest thou dash thy foot against a stone.

13 Thou shalt tread upon the lion and [†] adder: the young lion and the dragon shalt thou trample under feet.

14 Because he hath set his love upon me, therefore will I deliver him: I will set him on high,‡ because he hath known my name.§

15 He shall call upon me, and I will answer him: I will be with him in trouble; I will deliver him, and honour him.

16 With ‖ long life will I satisfy him, and show him my salvation.

* Secret place.—In the bosom of the Father, where the Son was in glory "before the foundation of the world"—our only conception of eternity; (See John 1. 18. & 17. 5. 1 John 1. 2.) for he that was before creation was, must have been eternal.—Ed.
† Heb. lodge.
‡ That the speaker is Christ, his own tacit acknowledgment, (Matt. 4. 6. compared with ver. 11, 12.) undeniably demonstrates. The amended translation of Loweth, instead of "I will say," gives "who saith," which seems more natural.—Ed.

§ The wings and feathers which God adopted in the emblematic cherubim that overshadowed the mercy-seat—which, again, was the emblem of Jesus, the propitiation or mercy-seat, for our sins.—Ed.
‖ The Lord which is my refuge.—By supplying the words which is, obscures the sense. "The Lord my refuge," like "the Lord our righteousness," should be taken as a title of Jehovah, appropriating the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, as his refuge; and through him, the refuge of every believer in his name.—Ed.
* Satan quoted this text correctly, so far as he went; and, so far, our Lord acknowledged the interpretation. But, yet, he quoted falsely, because he quoted imperfectly, and misrepresented the truth, as he suppressed an essential part. And so, in all ages, have all his servants dealt.—Ed.
† Or, asp.
‡ From ver. 14. to the end, the Father proclaims his exaltation of the Son, who now waiteth till all his enemies shall be put under his feet, and the last, which is death, shall be destroyed.—Ed.
§ The name is the revelation of the attributes or nature of God, chiefly in relation to man. See note on Ex. 34. 6. also Mat. 11. 27. John 10. 13.—Ed.

his whole providential work, but chiefly that of redemption through the blood of his Son. Happy are they who experimentally know the joyful sound of the gospel, proclaiming Jesus' victories over sin, Satan, the world, death, and hell; and pardon, peace, liberty, and eternal happiness, through his blood to sinful men. They walk in the light of JEHOVAH'S favour, direction, and joys! And gloriously are they justified, saved, strengthened, and honoured in Christ!—In these declarations of God to Samuel, concerning David, let me contemplate how JEHOVAH found out and laid our help, our salvation, upon Jesus Christ. He it was that supported, strengthened, attended, honoured, and owned him. He it is that forms, favours, corrects, but establishes his chosen seed.—Behold too the sufferings of Jesus and his church, from Satan, from Jews, from Heathens, from Antichristians: And how terrible the Almighty's displeasure! To be under it for ever constitutes hell. How short, how uncertain are our days on earth! If through Jesus, as our Righteousness and quickening Head, we do not live to God's glory here, and with God in glory hereafter, our life is worse than in vain. But painful is it for exercised souls to want the sense of God's love, even though it be secured in the covenant promise. And grievous are the virulent reproaches of Christ, his Father, and his people, and hard to be borne by a tender saint.

REFLECTIONS UPON PSALM XC.—Happy are they who, amidst a transitory and perishing world, have the eternal God for their ALL IN ALL. Sovereign is his dominion over mankind, and unsearchable his duration. But weak and shortlived are men. And it is madness to seek satisfaction and happiness in things so fleeting and unsubstantial. With what armies of sorrows hath sin invaded and overspread our earth: and how exactly every crime is observed by God, in order to correct or punish on account of it! But it is unavailing to live, or live long, unless we live to and in Christ. Yea, intolerable is the wrath which God has reserved for those who die in their sins. Every day, therefore, ought to be so numbered, as to flee from them to Jesus Christ our refuge. The great business of life is to make ready for death. To ponder aright what is to become of us in eternity is wisdom indeed, and deserves the most serious application. Gracious souls cannot without sorrow abide the sense of God's displeasure. And they, who have truly tasted the bitterness of sin, cannot rest till the Lord return in pardoning mercy, speak peace to their conscience, and enable them to rejoice in himself. And such as are faithful to Christ will be greatly concerned that he may work all in them, do all for them, give all to them; and that he may herein be glorified, not only in them, but also in their posterity after them.

REFLECTIONS UPON PSALM XCI.—While I here contemplate Jesus Christ, as the Father's darling, protected, guarded, attended, heard in his prayers, honoured, and crowned with life and glory everlasting, let me with wonder behold the happiness of all the saints, who make God their refuge and delightful habitation.

PSALM XCII.

(1) Praise for mercies, and triumph in the works of God: 1—5. (2) The ignorance and destruction of the wicked: 6—9. (3) The exaltation of the righteous one, and of all his members, in him: 10—15.

¶ A PSALM OR SONG FOR THE SABBATH-DAY.

A. M. cir. 2959. B. C. cir. 1045.

IT is a good thing to give thanks unto the LORD, and to sing praises unto thy name, O most High:

2 [a] To show forth thy loving-kindness in the morning, and thy faithfulness [*] every night,

3 [b] Upon an instrument of ten strings, and upon the psaltery; [†] upon the harp with [c] a solemn sound.[‡]

4 For thou, LORD, [d] hast made me glad through thy work: [§] I will triumph in the works of thy hands.

5 O LORD, how great are thy works! and thy thoughts are very deep.

6 A brutish man knoweth not; neither doth a fool understand this.

7 [e] When the wicked spring as the grass, and when all the workers of iniquity do flourish; it is that they shall be destroyed for ever:

8 But thou, LORD, art [f] most high for evermore.

9 For, lo, thine enemies, O LORD, for, lo, thine enemies shall perish; all the workers of iniquity shall be scattered.

10 [g] But my horn shalt thou exalt like the horn of an unicorn: [‖] I shall be anointed with fresh oil.

11 Mine eye also shall see my desire on mine enemies; and mine ears shall hear my desire of the wicked that rise up against me.

12 The righteous shall flourish like the palm-tree; [*] he shall grow like a cedar in Lebanon.

13 Those that be planted [†] in the house of the LORD shall flourish in the courts of our God.

14 They shall still bring forth fruit in old age; they shall be fat and [h] flourishing;

15 To show that the LORD is upright; he is my rock, and there is no unrighteousness in him.

‡ Of the several musical instruments here enumerated, there is little, if any, certain knowledge. A. M. cir. 2947. B. C. cir. 1057.

O LORD [a] God, to whom vengeance [*] belongeth; O God, to whom vengeance belongeth, [b] show thyself.

2 Lift up thyself, thou Judge of the earth: [c] render a reward to the proud.

3 LORD, how long shall the wicked, how long shall the wicked triumph?

4 How long shall they utter and speak hard things? and all the workers of iniquity boast themselves?

5 They break in pieces thy people, O LORD, and afflict thine heritage:

6 They slay the widow and the stranger, and murder the fatherless: [†]

7 Yet they say, The LORD shall not see, neither shall the God of Jacob regard it.

8 Understand, ye brutish among the people; [‡] and, ye fools, when will ye be wise?

9 He that planted the ear, shall he not hear? he that formed the eye, shall he not see?

10 He that chastiseth the heathen, shall not he correct? he that teacheth man knowledge, shall not he know?

11 [d] The LORD knoweth the thoughts of man, that they are vanity.

12 Blessed is the man [§] whom thou chastenest, O LORD, and teachest him out of thy law;

13 That thou mayest give him rest from the days of adversity, until the pit be digged for the wicked.

14 For the LORD will not cast off his people, neither will he forsake his inheritance:

15 But judgment shall return unto righteousness; [‖] and all the upright in heart [e] shall follow it.

who know his name, set their love on him, and call on him. Secured against every disappointment and danger, distinguished in the providence of God, guarded by angels, delivered from, and victorious over, the devil, that fowler, dragon, and lion of hell. JEHOVAH attends them in their troubles, hears their prayers, and gives them answers of peace. He exalts them on Christ their Rock, and makes them to sit with him on his throne; honours them with the relations of children, kings, and priests, unto God, and decks them with imputed righteousness and imparted grace. And, after preserving them in life according to their desire, he bestows upon them his unutterable blessedness above. May these things in Christ be the desire of my heart.

REFLECTIONS UPON PSALM XCII.—Whatever our engagements be, we are bound at least to begin and end every day with prayer and praise. And they, who have lively experience of God's love and faithfulness, will delight in daily showing forth his salvation. None, but such as are ignorant or wicked, will disregard his work of creation or providence; and much less that of redemption,—but short-lived is the flourishing of wicked men, and dreadful the misery in which it issues: and yet how God is glorified, and the saints comforted, by it! But pleasant and profitable to themselves and others, and honourable to God, shall be the spiritual growth of those who are planted in Christ, and live in continued fellowship with him.

REFLECTIONS UPON PSALM XCIII.—Solid and believing views of Jesus Christ are excellent means to subdue the pride, and remove the fear of man. They who have him for their King and Keeper have no reason to be moved from their steadfastness. No earthly dishonours need disquiet those who have Christ, the Lord of all, to be their Father and Portion. No troubles need dismay those who are by grace made one with the King eternal. No changes need discontent them who have God's sure testimonies for their heritage and the ground of their hope. None need be ashamed of holiness, which is the ornament of God's nature, of his renewed hearts, his church, and his heaven.

PSALM XCVI.

An exhortation to praise God, because of his excellency and speedy coming to judgment.

A. M. cir. 2959. B. C. cir. 1045.

O [a]SING unto the LORD a new song:* sing unto the LORD, all the earth.

2 Sing unto the LORD, bless his name; [b]show forth his salvation from day to day.

3 [c]Declare his glory among the heathen, his wonders among all people.

4 [d]For the LORD is great, and greatly to be praised: he is to be feared above all gods.

5 For [e]all the gods of the nations are idols: but the LORD made the heavens.

6 [f]Honour and majesty are before him; strength and beauty are in his sanctuary.

7 [g]Give unto the LORD, O ye kindreds of the people, give unto the LORD glory and strength.

8 [h]Give unto the LORD the glory [†]due unto his name: [i]bring an offering, and come into his courts.

9 O worship the LORD [k]in the beauty of holiness; fear before him, all the earth.

10 Say among the heathen that the LORD reigneth:[‡] the world also shall be established that it shall not be moved: [§]he shall judge the people righteously.

11 [m]Let the heavens rejoice, and let the earth be glad; let the sea roar, and the fulness thereof.

12 Let the field be joyful, and all that is therein; then shall all the trees of the wood rejoice

13 Before the LORD: for he cometh,[‖] for he cometh to judge the earth: he shall judge the world with righteousness, and the people with his truth.

‖ The repetition of the words he cometh to judgment, according to Scriptural custom, proves that it is nigh at hand, and carries us forward to the hour when "he shall come the second time, without sin, to salvation."—ED.

REFLECTIONS UPON PSALM XCIV.—Saints must always expect manifold injuries and oppressions in this world. But never must they usurp God's prerogative in avenging themselves, but patiently endure, and wait for the day when he that judges righteously shall arise to punish their adversaries. When men are abandoned by God to themselves, how their heart, hands, and tongue, concur in abusing him and his people! Astonishing is their atheism and stupidity! They sink even below common sense. But God makes the correction of his people to issue in their instruction, and in their spiritual or eternal rest and safety, while their wicked enemies are ruined. In due time he will rectify all seeming disorders; and the righteousness of his judgments shall be made clearly manifest, to the encouragement of the upright to follow him, and to praise him for his providences. And thrice happy are they who have treasured up manifold experiences of God's support, comfort, and deliverance, in their times of extreme distress! It will encourage them to expect the proper, seasonable, and righteous, ruin of all the enemies of the church, whether wicked courts in Israel, Assyrians, Chaldeans, Syro-grecians, obstinate Jews, Romish Heathens, Antichristians, or others.

REFLECTIONS UPON PSALM XCV.—God richly deserves our highest and most cordial praise. And we should invite one another to this blessed employ. How great is he, possessed of every necessary, infinite, and eternal excellency! How glorious his formation of all things, and his extensive dominion over them! How delightful and effective of blessings unnumbered, is his new covenant relation to men!—But if he be our Saviour and King, it is proper, it is necessary, that we be obedient subjects. To none but such is he the author of eternal salvation. To-day, without a moment's delay, we ought to hear his voice in the gospel, and to receive the offers of his grace. However slightly men pass over their sins, they are highly provoking in God's sight. And disbelief of his promises is one of the greatest insults that we can put upon him. That heart is hardened indeed, whom the great and precious promises of the gospel cannot effect. Let us take warning by the ruin of others, that we fall not after the same example of unbelief. Though God bear long with us, he will not bear always. The mercies which we have received from him, as well as the wilfulness of our ignorance, and our love to our errors, will fearfully aggravate our sin. And dreadful will be our case, if by his irrevocable oath he once exclude us from his new covenant, his celestial rest, on account of our despising it when offered to us in the gospel.

REFLECTIONS UPON PSALM XCVI.—Since to us Gentiles Jesus Christ and his word of salvation are now come, let us, in songs ever fresh, ever cordial, publish the glories of his grace, and the wonders of his redeeming mercy, power, holiness, and majesty. Let us acknowledge him as our saving Sovereign, present ourselves to him as living sacrifices, and in the pure ordinances of his grace worship him with pure hearts, and in a reverent and holy manner. Let us rejoice that his kingdom has been, is, and will be, established among the Gentiles on earth. Let us, with joy, hope for these latter days, in which Satan shall be bound, and all the kingdoms on earth subjected to the righteous and merciful government of our

PSALM XCVII.

A song of joy at the coming of the Lord.

THE [a]LORD reigneth;* let the earth rejoice; let the [b] multitude of isles be glad thereof.

2 Clouds and darkness† are round about him: righteousness and judgment are the ‡habitation of his throne.

3 A fire§ goeth before him, and burneth up his enemies round about.

4 [c]His lightnings enlightened the world; the earth saw, and trembled.

5 The hills melted like wax at the presence of the LORD, at the presence of the LORD of the whole earth.

6 [d]The heavens declare his righteousness, and all the people see his glory.

7 Confounded‖ be all they that serve graven images, that boast themselves of idols: worship him, all ye [e]gods.

8 Zion heard, and was glad; and the daughters of Judah rejoiced because of thy judgments, O LORD.

9 For thou, LORD, art high above all the earth; thou art exalted far above all gods.

10 Ye that love the LORD, [f]hate evil: he preserveth the souls of his saints; he delivereth them out of the hand of the wicked.

11 Light is sown* for the righteous, and gladness for the upright in heart.

12 Rejoice in the LORD, ye righteous; and give thanks §at the remembrance of his holiness.

PSALM C.

All lands summoned to praise and worship Jehovah.

¶ A PSALM OF *PRAISE.

MAKE [a] a joyful noise unto the LORD, †all ye lands.

2 Serve the LORD with gladness; come before his presence with singing.

3 [b] Know ye that the LORD he is God: it is he that hath [c] made us, ‡and not we ourselves:

Redeemer. And let us, with more exalted joy, expect his coming in the clouds, with power, and great glory, to judge, and finally decide the eternal state of men and angels.

REFLECTIONS UPON PSALM XCVII.—However mysterious and unsearchable God's providences be, they are always just and equal. A great shaking of the nations, by the Roman and other conquests, ushered in the gospel kingdom of our Lord Jesus Christ. A great destruction of obstinate Jews and Heathens, and overturning of idolatry in the world, attended the erection and spread of it. And a great overturning of Antichristians, Mahometans, and all their false worship, shall yet take place in its most glorious period. No exalted potentates, no mighty nations, nor fixed customs of wickedness, shall be able to withstand his conquering influence. Let saints then rejoice in his dignity of person, office, and state; in his gracious preservation and deliverance of his people; in the comforts and glory which he has prepared for them; and in his righteous judgments upon their implacable foes. And let their delight in his holiness inflame their love to himself, and their hatred of sin.

REFLECTIONS UPON PSALM XCVIII.—While I review these lofty notes, let me think what is JEHOVAH! What is Jesus to my heart! What of his marvellous incarnation, miracles, life, death, resurrection, and ascension; of his love to sinners; and of his gifts of pardon, grace, and glory; have I seen! What of his victories over sin, Satan, the world, and death; and of his righteousness and salvation manifested in the gospel; have I known, believed, and embraced! What of his mercy and truth, in fulfilling his promises, have I experienced! What of his coming in power to gather the world to himself, and of his coming in glory to judge the world, do I know, believe, and rejoice in hope of!

REFLECTIONS UPON PSALM XCIX.—Terrible is Jesus' royal power and dominion to his enemies; but comfortable and kindly awing to his saints. And in mercy, wisdom, and righteousness, he executes his office. God honours, and holds intimate fellowship with, those who are remarkably given to prayer: and effectual are their intercessions for the preservation of nations and churches. But he will make the dearest of them to smart severely for their sin in this life, notwithstanding they are fixed in a pardoned state. Great praise is due to God for his mercies. And deep awe and inward purity are necessary in worshipping him that is infinitely holy.

PSALM CII.

Grievous afflictions and earnest prayers, answered by precious truths and blessed promises.

¶ A PRAYER * OF THE AFFLICTED, WHEN HE IS OVERWHELMED, AND POURETH OUT HIS COMPLAINT BEFORE THE LORD.

HEAR my prayer, O LORD, and let my cry come unto thee.†

2 Hide not thy face from me in the day when I am in trouble; incline thine ear unto me: in the day when I call, answer me speedily.

3 For my days are consumed ‡ like smoke, and my bones are burnt as an hearth.

18 [m] This shall be written for the generation to come: and the people which shall be created shall praise the LORD.

20 To hear the groaning of the prisoner; to loose § those that are appointed to death;

21 [o] To declare the name of the LORD in Zion, and his praise in Jerusalem:

22 [p] When the people are gathered together, and the kingdoms, to serve the LORD.

25 [s] Of old hast thou laid the foundation of the earth; and the heavens are the work of thy hands.

26 They shall perish, but thou shalt * endure; yea, all of them shall wax old like a garment: as a vesture shalt thou change them, and they shall be changed:

REFLECTIONS UPON PSALM C.—What joyful praise, what grateful thanksgiving, what cheerful and hearty service, do we Gentiles owe to the Lord!—to him who is JEHOVAH, the infinite ALL!—to him who forms us both in nature and in grace!—to him who is our high Proprietor and Redeemer, our kind Shepherd, Leader, Provider, and Provision!—to him who is good in himself, and whose mercy and truth are for ever exerted in the fulfilment of gracious and new covenant promises to ransomed men!

REFLECTIONS UPON PSALM CI.—The lot of saints on earth is a strange mixture of mercies and judgments. But all of them, taken in their connexion and tendency, are to be improved as matter of praise and thanksgiving. Fellowship with, and influences from, God, must strengthen and animate us to every holy practice. Serious godliness is the most substantial wisdom; and to act for God in the religious management of families, kingdoms, or in other relative stations, is a noted branch of it. With the utmost care ought men, by whatever power they have, to discourage every thing wicked, and to encourage every thing virtuous and holy. But it is in vain to attempt instructing or reforming others, if we do not set them an example in our own practice.

REFLECTIONS UPON PSALM CII.—To what low condition God reduces his church and people, for the exercise and trial of their grace, and for exciting their more importunate prayers. In darkness, vexation, and trouble, their days often post toward an end. Afflicted, dispirited, and pained in their heart; and their body wasted to skin and bones: like owls and pelicans, they shun converse and

PSALM CIII.

The soul—the inner man of the heart—called to bless God for personal and diffusive mercies.

¶ A PSALM OF DAVID.

A. M. cir. 2948.
B. C. cir. 1056.

BLESS the LORD, O my soul; and all that is within me, bless his holy name.

2 Bless the LORD, O my soul, and forget not all his benefits:*

3 Who forgiveth all thine iniquities;† who healeth all thy diseases;

4 Who redeemeth thy life from destruction; who crowneth thee with loving-kindness and tender mercies.

5 Who satisfieth thy mouth with good things; so that thy youth is renewed like the eagle's.‡

6 The LORD executeth righteousness and judgment for all that are oppressed.

7 He made known his ways unto Moses, his acts unto the children of Israel.

8 The LORD is merciful and gracious, slow to anger, and plenteous in mercy.

9 He will not always chide; neither will he keep his anger for ever.

10 He hath not dealt with us after our sins; nor rewarded us according to our iniquities.

11 For as the heaven is high above the earth, so great is his mercy toward them that fear him.

12 As far as the east is from the west, so far hath he removed our transgressions from us.

13 Like as a father pitieth his children, so the LORD pitieth them that fear him.

14 For he knoweth our frame; he remembereth that we are dust.§

15 As for man, his days are as grass; as a flower of the field, so he flourisheth.

16 For the wind passeth over it, and it is gone; and the place thereof shall know it no more.

17 But the mercy of the LORD is from everlasting to everlasting upon them that fear him, and his righteousness unto children's children;

18 To such as keep his covenant,‖ and to those that remember his commandments to do them.

19 The LORD hath prepared* his throne in the heavens; and his kingdom ruleth over all.

20 Bless the LORD, ye his angels, [a] that excel in strength, that do his commandments, hearkening unto the voice of his word.†

21 Bless ye the LORD, all ye his hosts; ye ministers of his, that do his pleasure.

22 Bless the LORD, all his works in all places of his dominion: bless the LORD, O my soul.

* Forget not all his benefits.—A large portion of "childhood and youth," are truly "vanity," are spent in much ignorance of God, and pass into forgetfulness of his mercies. He whose eye saw, and whose memory records, "all the mercies" of Jehovah, can be no other than the all perfect Son of God.—ED.

† Iniquities.—For the literal, but peculiar, sense of imputation, or laying on, in which Christ could address these words to his soul, see on Ps. 32. 5. & 40. 12. and additional Editorial note on Ps. 23. 11.—ED.

‡ Like the eagle's.—This is no mere adoption of a popular opinion about the eagle's moulting in old age; nor any mere poetical ornament, which would be utterly inconsistent with simple and unchanging truth. Does not the entire difficulty arise from departing from the literal translation, and natural position of the original? Literally translated and placed, the passage would read thus:—"shall be renewed, (not as an eagle's, but) as an eagle, thy youth." That is, thy youthful strength (Is. 40. 31.) shall be renewed; and, as an eagle spurns the earth, soars above the clouds, and hides him in the sunbeams; so, on wings of heavenly devotion, thou shalt mount, and, while yet on earth, establish thy conversation in heaven.—ED.

§ From ver. 10, the true "children of Israel" make full acknowledgment of the preceding character of God, and especially in the total removal of their sins, (ver. 12.) effected by the blood of the Lamb. The east and west can never meet, no more can the justified believer again encounter his sins. The waters of mercy have passed over them, and their remembrance is gone for ever.—ED.

‖ This is not that covenant of works which saith, "Cursed is every one that continueth not in all things written in the book of the law, to do them;" but that covenant of grace, recorded by Paul, (Heb. 8. 8—12.) wherein the cleansing of the believer lies in the Redeemer's blood, (1 John 1. 7.) and his completeness and acceptance in the Redeemer's righteousness, Col. 2. 10. Eph. 1. 6.—ED.

* That is, prepared it first for his Son, and then for believers in him. Comp. this verse with John 14. 2. & Rev. 3. 21.—ED.

[a] Heb. mighty in strength. Ps. 104. 4. & 66. 17. 2 Kin. 19. 35.

† To the voice of his incarnate Word—his Son. Heb. 1. 6.—ED.

PSALM CIV.

The soul called to bless the Lord, on contemplation of his wonderful works: and the people exhorted to join the strain of praise.

A. M. cir. 2962.
B. C. cir. 1042.

BLESS the LORD, O my soul. O LORD my God, thou art very great;* [a] thou art clothed with honour and majesty:

2 Who coverest thyself with light as with a garment; who stretchest out the heavens like a curtain;

3 Who layeth the beams of his chambers in the waters; [b] who maketh the clouds his chariot; who walketh upon the wings of the wind;

4 Who maketh his angels spirits, his ministers a flaming fire;

5 [c] Who laid the foundations of the earth, that it should not be removed for ever.†

6 [d] Thou coveredst it with the deep as with a garment: the waters stood above the mountains.

7 At thy rebuke they fled; at the voice of thy thunder‡ they hasted away.

8 § They go up‖ by the mountains; they go down by the valleys unto the place which thou hast founded for them.

9 * Thou hast set a bound that they may not pass over; that they turn not again to cover the earth.

10 * He sendeth the springs into the valleys, which † run among the hills.

11 [f] They give drink to every beast of the field: the wild asses ‡ quench their thirst.

12 By them shall the fowls of the heaven have their habitation, which § sing among the branches.

13 He watereth the hills from his ‖ chambers; the earth is satisfied with the fruit of thy works.

14 He causeth the grass to grow for the cattle, and herb for the service of man; that he may bring forth food out of the earth,

15 And wine that maketh glad the heart of man, and [h] oil to make his face to shine, and bread which strengtheneth man's heart.

16 [i] The trees of the LORD are full of sap; the cedars of Lebanon, which he hath planted;

17 Where the birds make their nests: as for the stork, the fir-trees are her house.‖

18 The high hills are a refuge for the wild goats, and the rocks for the conies.

19 He appointed the moon for seasons; the sun knoweth his going down.

20 Thou makest darkness, and it is night; wherein * all the beasts of the forest do creep forth.

* The greatness of God in power, can be estimated only by his works. Accordingly, the Spirit, by Christ, as the prophet of the church, here catalogues, as it were, and expounds some of the most remarkable and intelligible departments, whereby man may learn his own comparative weakness, nay, nothingness, and humble himself beneath the mighty power of God.—ED.

† This is not contradicted by what is declared, Heb. 1. 10—12; for, in point of fact, it is completely demonstrable by mathematical evidence, that the "foundations of the earth, and of the whole planetary system, are calculated to abide for ever, unless he that laid them be pleased again to overturn them, and make all things new. Both these views are in strict accordance with the assertion in this verse.—ED.

§ Or, The mountains ascend, the valleys descend.

‖ The waters go up, partly in vapours which are condensed into water by cold; and partly in clouds, which are changed into water, not by cold, but by the electric agency. These waters are then absorbed into the bowels of the mountains, and chiefly by gravitation reconducted to the valleys.—ED.

comfort, and pine away in melancholy solitude. Often, like lonely sparrows, they are debarred from rest and sleep, and are deserted by friends, or avoid their company: are exposed to the reproach and fury of inveterate enemies—oppressed with grief—overwhelmed with a sense of God's indignation, in his sudden and awful changing of their comforts into depths of misery, till near the grave, and apparently near the pit! But great is the mercy that they have, notwithstanding, a God, a hearer of prayer, to whom they may complain; and a heart to pour out before him. Be the afflictions of the righteous as numerous as they will, the eternal Saviour has, and does, and will deliver them out of them all. He has fixed the periods of his church's deliverance, and issued forth promises ascertaining the same. While with deep concern his servants are affected with her ruinous case, and pour forth their importunate prayers, he will fly to her relief, to the conversion of multitudes and the terror of obstinate opposers. What he did in former times, in delivering from Babylon, in erecting the New Testament church, and in destroying her Jewish and Heathen persecutors, encourages us to hope for more glorious deliverances from Antichrist, and at last from the world that lieth in wickedness. And whatever distresses befall the redeemed in their way to the heavenly mansions, Jesus' eternity secures the perseverance and stability of his church, and of every true member of it.

6 [f] O ye seed of Abraham his servant, ye children of Jacob his chosen.

7 [g] He is the LORD our God:* [h] his judgments are in all the earth.

8 [i] He hath remembered his covenant for ever, the word which he commanded to a thousand generations:

9 [k] Which covenant he made with Abraham, and his oath unto Isaac;

10 And confirmed the same unto Jacob for a law, and to Israel for an everlasting covenant;

11 Saying, Unto thee will I give the land of Canaan, [l] the lot of your inheritance:

12 When they were but [m] a few men in number; yea, very few, and [n] strangers in it.

13 [o] When they went from one nation to another, from one kingdom to another people,

14 [p] He suffered no man to do them wrong; yea, he reproved kings for their sakes;

15 Saying, [q] Touch not mine anointed, and do my prophets no harm.

16 Moreover, he called for [r] a famine upon the land: he brake the whole staff of bread.[†]

17 [s] He sent a man before them, even Joseph, who was sold for a servant;[‡]

18 [t] Whose feet they hurt with fetters: [§] he was laid in iron;

19 Until the time that his [u] word came: the word of the LORD tried him.

20 [x] The king sent and loosed him; even the ruler of the people, and let him go free.

21 [y] He made him lord of his house, and ruler of all his [‖] substance;

22 To bind his princes at his pleasure, and teach his senators wisdom.

23 [z] Israel also came into Egypt, and Jacob sojourned in the land of Ham:

24 [a] And he increased his people greatly, and made them stronger than their enemies.

25 [b] He turned their heart* to hate his people, to deal subtilely with his servants.

26 [c] He sent Moses his servant, and Aaron whom he had chosen.

27 [d] They showed his [†] signs among them, and wonders in the land of Ham.

28 He sent darkness, and made it dark; and [e] they rebelled not against his word.[‡] with God our hearts ought to be wholly engaged. But how shameful is it that we ever forget, that we so early forget, his mercies!—his mercies so great, so necessary, so numerous, so connected, so everlasting!—his unbounded compassion, to us, who are so mean, so frail, so polluted!—his free, full, and everlasting pardons should humble our hearts, and animate us to holy fear, love, and obedience. And, while all his creatures in heaven and earth concur to bless and serve him, surely we, above all, whom Christ hath redeemed by his blood, should never be silent, never be slothful!

REFLECTIONS UPON PSALM CIV.—Great is the glory, the awful majesty, the infinite goodness and mercy of our God! In what bright abodes of light is he enthroned! While clouds and winds convey the influences of his power, angelic hosts, made by himself, surround his seat, and bear his messages. Established earth and bounded seas confess his power. Springs below, rains from above, fruitful fields, and towering trees, nestling birds, shining luminaries, changing seasons, ravenous animals, swarming fishes, and their spacious sea, and labouring man, his Maker's image, all preserved, all maintained, all governed by his power, his kindness, and his care, owe their whole selves and service to this mighty Lord! Can he then, who hangs a whole creation on his arm, and feeds them at his board, let slip a ransomed child, or let him starve! While he with pleasure upholds all, governs all, and rejoices in all his works, let my soul, touched by his grace, meditate and praise: and while obstinate sinners are consumed from earth, and shut up in hell, let my Hosannas and Hallelujahs ascend to him that loved me, and gave himself for me.

A continuation of the former psalm, exhorting to praise God by a continued record of his providence and grace.

PRAISE [a] ye the LORD. O give thanks unto the LORD; for he is good: for his mercy endureth for ever.

2 Who can utter the mighty acts of the LORD? who can show forth all his praise?

3 Blessed are they that [b] keep judgment, and he that doeth righteousness at all times.[*]

7 Our fathers [d] understood not thy wonders in Egypt; they remembered not the multitude of thy mercies; [e] but provoked him at the sea, even at the Red sea.

8 [f] Nevertheless he saved them for his name's sake,[*] that he might make his mighty power to be known.

9 [g] He rebuked the Red sea also, and it was dried up: so he led them through the depths, as through the wilderness.

10 [h] And he saved them from the hand of him that hated them, and redeemed them from the hand of the enemy.

11 [i] And the waters covered their enemies; there was not one of them left.

12 [k] Then believed they his words; they sang his praise.

13 [l] [†] They soon[‡] forgat his works; they waited not for his counsel;[§]

19 [r] They made a calf in Horeb, and worshipped the molten [†]image.

20 [s] Thus they changed their glory into the similitude of an ox that eateth grass.

21 [t] They forgat God[‡] their saviour, which had done [u] great things in Egypt;

22 Wondrous works in the land of Ham, and terrible things by the Red sea.

23 [x] Therefore he said that he would destroy them, had not Moses his chosen stood before him in the breach, to turn away his wrath, lest he should destroy them.

24 Yea, [y] they despised [z] the pleasant land; [a] they believed not his word;

25 [b] But murmured in their tents, and hearkened not unto the voice of the LORD:

26 Therefore he [c] lifted up his hand against them, to overthrow them in the wilderness:

27 [§] To overthrow their seed also among the nations, and to [d] scatter them in the lands.

28 [e] They joined themselves also unto Baal-peor, and ate the sacrifices of the dead.[‖]

REFLECTIONS UPON PSALM CV.—How infinitely excellent is this God, who deserves such gratitude, such praise, such search, such confidence! Marvellous is his covenant relation to us, and covenanted mercies towards us: and thrice happy are they who have him their own and their father's God! Happy are they who know the judgments of his mouth, his word, and live thereby; and for whose welfare the judgments of his hand are executed in all the earth! From mean appearances God's great manifestations of himself take their rise. But great is the care he takes of his chosen in this world, where they are but few, and strangers. He that touches them touches the apple of his eye. And apparent difficulties easily vanish before the power of a promising God. But how mysterious are his ways of providence! When things seem most against us, they are often strongly working for our good. Even calumnies and sufferings are made to try and prepare men for, and advance them to, honour. His church shall never want a friend in time of need. He can raise them up protectors where they least expect to find favour. And if God advance us, our duty is to discern his hand, and to adorn our station, by making it subservient to his glory. No danger or difficulty must deter us when his work is to be done.—All creatures concur in executing God's will of judgment or mercy. His protection, deliverance, and care of his people, are wonderfully connected with the most fearful plagues and ruin on their enemies. And through trials unnumbered, and of long continuance, God's promises are at last perfectly accomplished in his people's perfect happiness.

29 Thus [f] they provoked him to anger with their inventions; and the [g] plague brake in upon them.

30 [h] Then stood up Phinehas, and executed judgment; and so [i] the plague was stayed:

31 And that was [k] counted unto him for righteousness unto all generations for evermore.

32 [l] They angered him also at the waters of strife, so that it went ill with Moses for their sakes:

33 Because they provoked his spirit, so that he [m] spake unadvisedly with his lips.

34 [n] They did not destroy the nations, [o] concerning whom the LORD commanded them;

40 Therefore [u] was the wrath of the LORD kindled against his people, insomuch that he abhorred his own inheritance.

41 [x] And he gave them into the hand of the heathen; and they that hated them ruled over them.

42 Their enemies also oppressed them, and they were brought into subjection under their hand.

43 [y] Many times did he deliver them: but they provoked him with their counsel, and were [†] brought low for their iniquity.‡

44 Nevertheless he regarded their affliction, [z] when he heard their cry:

45 [a] And he remembered for them his covenant, and [b] repented according to the multitude of his mercies.§

46 [c] He made them also to be pitied of all those that carried them captives.‖

47 [d] Save us, O LORD our God, and gather us from among the heathen, [e] to give thanks unto thy holy name, and to triumph in thy praise.

48 [f] Blessed be the LORD God of Israel from everlasting to everlasting: and let all the people say, Amen. Praise ye the LORD.

REFLECTIONS UPON PSALM CVI.—Wonderful and thank-worthy are all the deeds, the gracious deeds, of our God. Blessed are they who make his word their rule, and his righteousness the ground of their acceptance, and the example of their holy practice! Happy are they who enjoy intimate fellowship with him in his saving works and benefits. But how horrid is sin, which seeks to trample him, and all his kindness, under foot! And awful is the reflection, that one generation should follow another in adding sin to sin. We need not upbraid the sinners who went before us, as we are involved in the same fearful crimes. Notwithstanding both mercies and judgments, how stupidly insensible, how strangely forgetful, how discontented with God's marvellous provision, how rebellious against his deputies and government,—what distinguished idolaters, murmurers, infidels, adulterers, and how perversely disobedient—does sin make God's professed people! Often they proceed from evil to worse, till his indignation break forth against them without remedy. But great is the mercy, when sinful nations and churches have any among them, who, by their prayers and their zeal, stand in the gap, and avert the Lord's indignation. With pleasure he looks upon such, and highly honours them on that account. But infinite is the goodness of our God, who, when provoked to add one stroke to another, and to make wicked tempters to sin cruel tormentors for it, is so ready to step in for our relief, and to rebuke, or even turn the hearts of them that destroyed us. Never is a penitent prayer poured out into his bosom 34 A fruitful land into [c] barrenness, for the wickedness of them that dwell therein.

35 [d] He turneth the wilderness into a standing water, and dry ground into water-springs:

36 [e] And there he maketh the hungry to dwell, that they may prepare a city for habitation;

37 [f] And sow the fields, and plant vineyards, which may yield fruits of increase.

38 He blesseth them also, so that they are multiplied greatly, and suffereth not their cattle to decrease.

39 Again, they are minished, and brought low through oppression, affliction, and sorrow.

40 He poureth contempt upon princes,* and causeth them to wander in the †wilderness, where there is no way.

41 Yet setteth he the poor on high ‡from affliction, and maketh him families like a flock.

† Not even the earthquake is so terrible an example of the divine power, or emblem of the divine wrath, as the sea-storm; the earthquake soon passes over, and is generally confined to a few spots of an island or continent; but the sea-storm continues unabated or increasing for days, and rages over the vast expanse of an ocean, dispersing navies as the light foam upon its waves, and swallowing into its deep recesses the collected riches of distant lands. Yet this terrible storm is the Lord's voice to his children; and, when all other help is vain, "they cry unto him, and he bringeth them out of their distresses." Ah! Britain, Britain! remember the sailor boy! he is the trustee of all thy wealth, the right arm of all thy power. 3 I [d] will praise thee, O LORD, among the people; and I will sing praises unto thee among the nations.

4 [e] For thy mercy is great above the heavens; and thy truth reacheth unto the †clouds.

5 [f] Be thou exalted, O God, above the heavens, and thy glory above all the earth;

8 Gilead is mine; Manasseh is mine; Ephraim also is the [k] strength of mine head; Judah is my lawgiver;

9 [l] Moab is my wash-pot; over Edom will I cast out my shoe; over Philistia will I triumph.

10 [m] Who will bring me into the strong city? who will lead me into Edom?

11 Wilt not thou, O God, who [n] hast cast us off? and wilt not thou, O God, go forth with our hosts?

12 [o] Give us help from trouble; for vain is the help of man.

but it returns in gracious preservation and deliverance. Let then all our troubles drive us to the throne of grace; and all our mercies, bestowed or promised, encourage our prayers, and animate our praise.

REFLECTIONS UPON PSALM CVII.—Behold the effects of sin in forms unnumbered! in wanderings, in imprisonments, sickness, storms, barrenness, poverty, &c. Behold also the power of effectual fervent prayer!—it brings speedy relief in every case. The holiness and equity, the goodness, mercy, and sovereignty of God, are connectedly displayed in his providence to men. With exact and humble care ought we then to consider the doing of the Lord, and to compare it with his word, and with our prayers, and one part of it with another; so shall we understand the loving-kindness of the Lord. And, were we accurate observers of providence, constantly would our heart, our lips, and life, be filled with the high praises of his kindness, and of his wonderful works towards the children of men.

REFLECTIONS UPON PSALM CVIII.—Quickly God can change the lot, can change the frames, and change the songs of his people; and put high praises in the room of bitter wailings. How confidently then may saints expect to see the salvation of God! What he has promised faith can rejoice in as if already performed: and whatever difficulties be in the way, nothing is too hard for the Lord. However strong their enemies, and weak their souls, they shall prove more than conquerors through him that loveth them.

26 [c]Help me, O LORD my God: O save me according to thy mercy:

27 [d]That they may know that this is thy hand; that thou, LORD, hast done it.

28 [e]Let them curse, but bless thou: when they arise, let them be ashamed; but let thy servant rejoice.

29 Let mine adversaries be clothed with shame, and let them cover themselves with their own confusion, as with a mantle.

REFLECTIONS UPON PSALM CIX.—Dreadful must be the nature of sin, which makes men so desperate and outrageous enemies to Christ and his people. But terrible, spreading, and extensive, lasting, and yet most righteous, are the judgments which overtake them from heaven, from earth, and from hell! Deep marked was this truth on the enemies of David, on Judas the traitor, and his Jewish brethren, the murderers of our Lord and his saints; and on heathenish and popish Romans. But if men spitefully abuse us, let us give ourselves unto prayer. Though our God be long silent, he will speak at the last. If he help, we need not regard who harass us. If he bless, we need not care who curse us. If all our hopes be placed on his boundless mercy and grace, no matter how we be loaded with poverty, wounds of spirit, decay of body, or revilings of men. He can quickly help and save us. The more shame we take to ourselves for our sins, we are in the less danger of suffering for them. And God's support and salvation shall quickly fill our mouths with high and everlasting praise.

REFLECTIONS UPON PSALM CX.—How high is the dignity of our Redeemer! Glorious is his reward for his work of obedience and suffering. And all his enemies—sin, Satan, the world, and death—are made to bow under his feet. The everlasting gospel, sent forth into all the world, becomes effectual to men's salvation, and his kingdom is established, in despite of all opposition. Multitudes of his enemies, made willing in the day of his power, cheerfully enlist themselves in his service, and worship him in the beauties of holiness. In the morning of the gospel period, through the heavenly influence of the blessed Spirit, multitudes, fresh and flourishing in heart, surrendered themselves to this Lord. And upon the most solid ground are believers' hopes and comforts founded—the all-sufficiency of Jesus Christ, and the oath of the eternal JEHOVAH. With confidence then ought we always to expect pardon, peace, and all the blessings of salvation, from this great High Priest of our profession. Horrid is the crime, if for a moment we dare question his power and grace, and stagger at promises confirmed by two immutable things—the word and oath of that God who cannot lie. And while Jesus, finishing his obedience, and strengthened by the Holy Ghost, lifts up his head in everlasting triumph, dreadful is the ruin of his malicious and powerful opposers, Jews, Heathens, Antichristians, and others.

PSALM CXI.

Praise due to God on account of his providence and redemption.

PRAISE * ye the LORD. [a] I will praise the LORD with my whole heart, in the assembly of the upright, and in the congregation.†

2 [b] The works of the LORD are great, [c] sought out of all them that have pleasure therein.

7 [k] The works of his hands are verity and judgment; all his commandments are sure.

8 They § stand fast‖ for ever and ever, and are done in truth and uprightness.

PSALM CXII.

The character and blessedness of the righteous.

PRAISE * ye the LORD. Blessed is the man that feareth the LORD, that delighteth greatly in his commandments.

2 His seed shall be mighty upon earth: the generation of the upright shall be blessed.

3 Wealth and riches shall be in his house; [a] and his righteousness endureth for ever.†

4 Unto the upright there ariseth light in the darkness: [b] he is gracious, and full of compassion, and righteous.

5 A good man showeth favour, and lendeth: he will guide his affairs with [c] discretion.

6 Surely he shall not be moved for ever: the righteous shall be in everlasting remembrance.

7 [d] He shall not be afraid of evil tidings: ‡ his heart is fixed, trusting in the LORD.

8 His heart is established, he shall not be afraid, until [e] he see his desire upon his enemies.

PRAISE [a] ye the LORD. [b] Praise, O ye servants of the LORD, praise the name* of the LORD.

2 [c] Blessed be the name of the LORD from this time forth and for evermore.

REFLECTIONS UPON PSALM CXI.—Praising of God ought to be hearty, candid and avowed: and they who inculcate it upon others should carefully exemplify it in their own practice. How extensive are the grounds of it! A God infinitely gracious and faithful, ever mindful of his new covenant, and every promise thereof; holy and reverend in nature and in name. His works are unsearchably glorious, memorable, powerful, just, and true; and all of them communicating provision and riches to them that fear him. Fixed, everlasting, true, and candid, are all his counsels and words, exactly conformable to his righteous nature, and must be obeyed in simplicity by them that serve him. Everlasting, ordered in all things and sure, is his covenant, and all the redemption it prepares and communicates to men. And they are the only wise persons who fear him and keep his commandments; everlasting shall be their honour and reward.

REFLECTIONS UPON PSALM CXII.—What holy awe of God, delight in spiritual things, candour, kindness, and equity, are necessary in our obedience to God's law! And great profit, stability, honour, safety, quietness of mind, and victory over all our enemies, are secured for its reward. But how unhappy are the wicked, whose wishes shall be either cursed or denied: and to whom even the happiness of the godly is an insupportable vexation.

REFLECTIONS UPON PSALM CXIII.—O what an eternity it will require for the redeemed servants of the Lord sufficiently to praise their high, their unparalleled, their condescending Redeemer, who, by his own debasement, raises multitudes of mankind from the pit of corruption to the loftiest thrones of bliss; and now makes the Gentile world, after long barrenness, to bring forth a numerous seed of converts to himself in his gospel church!

REFLECTIONS UPON PSALM CXIV.—In infinite sovereignty God chooses whom of mankind he pleases to be his peculiar people, and to be blessed with his oracles, ordinances, and gracious influences. And nothing can detain his people in their spiritual bondage when he draws them out. Nothing, no not seas of tribulation, nor mountains of unbelief and corruption, can stop their passage to the heavenly

(1) The glory of Jehovah: 1—3. (2) The vanity of idols and idolaters: 4—8. (3) An exhortation and resolution to trust in Jehovah, because of his grace and dominion: 9—18.

NOT [a] unto us, O LORD, not unto us, but unto thy name [*] give glory, for thy mercy, [†] and for thy truth's sake.

2 Wherefore should the heathen say, [b] Where is now their God?

3 [c] But our God is in the heavens; he hath done whatsoever he hath pleased. [‡]

4 [d] Their idols are silver and gold, the work of men's hands.

5 [e] They have mouths, but they speak not; eyes have they, but they see not;

6 They have ears, but they hear not; noses have they, but they smell not;

7 They have hands, but they handle not; feet have they, but they walk not; neither speak they through their throat.

8 [f] They that make them [§] are like unto them; so is every one that trusteth in them.

9 [g] O Israel, trust thou in the LORD: [h] he is their help and their shield.

11 [k] Ye that fear the LORD, trust in the LORD: he is their help and their shield.

13 He will bless them that fear the LORD, both small [n] and great.

14 [o] The LORD shall increase you more and more, you and your children.

Canaan. Nor while Jesus, our smitten Rock of ages, continues a fountain open, shall they want refreshment by the way. Tremble then, my carnal heart, at the presence of a God in Christ as my own. And let all my hardened powers be melted by his love.

REFLECTIONS UPON PSALM CXV.—Let us be always nothing in our own eyes, and let Christ be all and in all. To his grace every good thing in us, or done by us, must be ascribed. But disgracing to human nature, as well as dishonouring to God, is the worshipping of idols. And how absurd it is for idolaters to upbraid the saints with their all-present, all-creating, and all-governing JEHOVAH. Great is their encouragement to trust in a God, who is so much, and gives so much to his people; nay, gives so much to men! They can never fail whose faith stands firm. And greatly then should we exert ourselves in praising and serving God here, as in death we shall have no such opportunities for it.

REFLECTIONS UPON PSALM CXVI.—Happy are they who love the Lord! They are every moment laid under fresh obligations to this delightful exercise. Prayers heard by God should always make us love him more, and praise him more. And if we are in Christ, our troubles may be very sore, but our victory and deliverance are sure and near. Delightful consolation and rest succeed the bitterest tribulations to his saints. And pleasant is that rest which is enjoyed in a Saviour's arms, and under the covert of his blood. It is honourable, as well as dutiful, to walk always as under his eye, and in conformity to him; in subjection to his will as our Sovereign, and in dependence on him as our all-sufficient portion. The consideration that we are in the land of the living should quicken us to it. And it is delightful to speak and practise that which our heart believes upon God's testimony, ratified by the blood of his Son. But often, under strong temptations, and in deep afflictions, the strongest believers have had their faith shaken, and have been surprised into thoughts and words extremely dishonourable to God. Yet he upholds them that fall, and makes them quickly to change their voice. And O how pleasant it is, to be so overwhelmed with a sense of God's love, that we scarcely know what praise, what vows, or what service to return him in gratitude! But while we praise him for what we have received, we must eagerly drink more and more of his cup of salvation, and receive more and more out of his fulness, and grace for grace. How precious and delightful to God is the death of his saints for, or in, the Lord! But much more that unparalleled death of Jesus Christ for the saints, who loosed all our bonds and purchased all our blessings.

PSALM CXIX.

[As in the works of God "one star differeth from another star in glory," it is not surprising if, in the word of God, one portion is found to surpass another in the preciousness of its sacred contents. All parts of Scripture are alike true; yet are there various ways in which one portion may surpass another. Some parts surpass others because they concentrate truths of deeper interest; point the finger of their light towards fairer objects; stir up the weary spirit to higher aspirations; and minister to the sick soul the air and the sun of a brighter climate—and all this because they contain more than other portions do, of the person, the humiliation, the sorrows, the fervent prayers, the strong cries, the flowing tears, and earnest supplications—and more, of the death, the sacrifice, the resurrection, the righteousness, the intercession, and glory of Jesus!

Of the 119th Psalm all this is specially true; other Psalms shine as suns in the firmament; this is a constellation of suns—a galaxy of divine light and glory—Jesus its "all and in all." That this may appear, the attention of the unprejudiced and godly reader, is humbly solicited to the following facts: 1. One speaker, whoever he be, speaks of himself throughout the whole Psalm; 2. The following is the speaker's character, drawn by himself, under the sure guidance of the Spirit of God: "With my whole heart have I sought thee; ver. 10.—Thy word have I hid in my heart, that I might not sin against thee; 11.—With my lips have I declared all the judgments of thy mouth; 13.—I will not forget thy word; 16.—My soul breaketh for the longing that it hath unto thy judgments at all times; 20.—I have kept thy testimonies; 22.—Teach me, O Lord, the way of thy statutes, and I shall keep it unto the end; 33.—I shall keep thy law; I shall observe it with my whole heart; 34.—I shall keep thy law continually, for ever and ever; 44.—I have not declined from thy law; 51.—I have kept thy law; 55.—I kept thy precepts; 56.—I will keep thy precepts with my whole heart; 69.—I forsook not; I will never forget thy precepts; 87, 88.—Thou, through thy commandments, hast made me wiser than all mine enemies; for they (the commandments) are ever with me; 98.—I understand more than the ancients, because I keep thy precepts; 100.—I have refrained my feet from every evil way; 101.—I have not departed from thy judgments; 102.—I have sworn, and I will perform it, that I will keep thy righteous judgments; 106.—I do not forget thy law; I erred not from thy precepts; I have inclined my heart to perform thy statutes alway; 109, 110—112.—I will keep the commandments of my God; 115.—I will have respect unto thy statutes continually; 117.—I have done judgment and justice; 124.—Thy testimonies are wonderful, therefore doth my soul keep them; 129.—My zeal hath consumed me; 139.—I cried with my whole heart; hear me, O Lord, I will keep thy statutes; 145.—I do not decline from thy testimonies; 157.—I have hoped for thy salvation, and done thy commandments; I have kept thy precepts and thy testimonies, for all my ways are before thee; 166—168.—I have chosen thy precepts; I do not forget thy commandments;" 173—176.

Now, that David never imagined such a character for himself, is historically unquestionable. The finger of the Spirit of truth ever pointing to his sin, renders the supposition impossible. Would Paul have mistaken the portrait for his own? When he dipped his pencil in colours of truth and light, he produced a portrait of himself, inscribed as "the chief of sinners." Who then is this? say is not this REFLECTIONS UPON PSALM CXVII.—Thrice happy is the Gentile world when blessed with the fulness of Christ! Behold mercy preached, offered, and given to us! mercy abounding to the chief of sinners; mercy extending to millions of lost souls, and securing to them everlasting pardon, purity, strength, comfort, and glory! Behold also the unchangeable faithfulness of God, confirmed by his oath and blood, and engaged to make good to us all the promises of his everlasting covenant!

REFLECTIONS UPON PSALM CXVIII.—Animated are the saints' praises to their God, when the mercy that is in his nature and relation to them is clearly discerned; the mercies he hath granted are kindly reviewed; and the mercies he hath in store and in promise are firmly believed! No wonder that such invite all around them to sing of his everlasting mercy and grace! No wonder they pour contempt on all created confidences, and disregard all opposition from earth and hell! No wonder they ascribe the glory of all to God; that they ask all from Jesus? the chiefest among ten thousand, and altogether lovely? Yes, this is unquestionably the guileless, the spotless Lamb, who magnified the law and made it honourable; who knew no sin, yet was made sin for us, that we might be made the righteousness of God in him.

In face of this inevitable conclusion, three difficulties present themselves: 1. In verse 67, the speaker admits, "Before I was afflicted, I went astray;" and does not this seem to imply an acknowledgment of personal error and sin? Not so, the difficulty arises from the translation. The word here translated "went astray," signifies to wander, either naturally or morally. Thus it is translated in a natural, and not a moral sense. Gen. 21. 14. & 37. 15. Now if the natural sense explain the passage, and if the moral sense of wandering be utterly inconsistent with the asserted character of the speaker—a character, be it remembered, every word of which has passed the testing fire of the Holy Spirit, then surely there can be no doubt, that in the natural, and not in the moral sense, the word wandered is here to be taken. 2. A second obstruction to the acknowledgment of Jesus in this Psalm, arises from the frequent prayers of the speaker for teaching and guidance. But this obstruction arises merely from allowing the brilliancy of the Son's Godhead to dazzle and confuse the eyes in contemplating his manhood. Christ was truly God, John 1. 1, 14; he was as truly man; made in all things like unto his brethren, yet without sin. Now, in this humbled condition he appeared not in "the form of God," but "the form of a servant." And hence, "though he were a Son, yet, (being in servant form) learned he obedience by the things that he suffered." Heb. 5. 8. And, as the teaching Spirit descends to us only by the prayer of Christ to the Father, (John 14. 16.) so we behold our Lord, in the days of his flesh, call upon the Father for the same heavenly instruction. 3. The third obstruction to the acknowledgment of Jesus in this Psalm, is found in verse 176, "I have gone astray like a lost sheep." This obstruction, however, is but another mistranslation. The word here translated "gone astray," is not the same that occurs in ver. 67. The word here used, signifies to pant, and is so translated, Is. 21. 4. A more correct rendering is unquestionably as follows:—"I have panted as a sheep perishing," and this is in perfect keeping with the life, toils, and condition of our Lord, in the sorrowful days of his flesh.]—Ed.

65 Thou hast dealt well with thy servant, O LORD, according unto thy word.

66 [a] Teach me good judgment and knowledge: for I have believed thy commandments.

67 Before I was afflicted I went astray:* [b] but now have I kept thy word.

68 Thou art good, and doest good: [c] teach me thy statutes.

69 The proud have forged a lie against me: but I will keep thy precepts with my whole heart.

92 Unless thy law had been my delights, I should then have perished in mine affliction.

93 I will never forget thy precepts: for with them thou hast quickened me.

100 I understand more than the ancients,* because I keep thy precepts.

101 I have refrained my feet from every evil way, that I might keep thy word.

102 [d] I have not departed from thy judgments: for thou hast taught me.

103 How sweet are thy words unto my [†]taste! yea, sweeter than honey to my mouth!

108 Accept, I beseech thee, the free-will-offerings of my mouth, O LORD, and [a] teach me thy judgments.

109 My soul is continually in my hand; [b] yet do I not forget thy law.

110 [c] The wicked have laid a snare for me; yet I erred not from thy precepts.

111 [d] Thy testimonies have I taken as an heritage for ever: [e] for they are the rejoicing of my heart.

112 [f] I have inclined mine heart [‡]to perform thy statutes alway, even unto the end.

REFLECTIONS UPON PSALM CXIX.—Let this Psalm be a touchstone, by which I may try my heart and my life. Let me constantly inquire—Are these gracious tempers and holy exercises of faith, love, hope, humility, patience, and zeal, to be found in my soul? Has my heart, purged from an evil conscience in Jesus' blood, made these meditations, prayers, resolutions, and confessions, truly my own? Is God's word, his Testaments in Jesus' blood, the sole standard of all my faith and law of my practice? Is it the channel of Jesus' fulness of grace and comfort to my heart? Is it the instructor, the counsellor, the quickener, the medicine, the armour, the treasury, the wealth, the support, the guard, the joy, and the ALL of my soul?—Do I receive it as a word to me from God, and use it as my plea with him for whatever I need? Happy is he that is thus living in these delightful exercises!

The blessedness of faith, and judgment of apostasy.

A. M. cir. 2984. B. C. cir. 1020.

THEY that trust in the LORD shall be as mount Zion, which cannot be removed,[*] but abideth for ever.

2 [a] As the mountains are round about Jerusalem, so the LORD is round about his people from henceforth, even for ever.

3 For the rod of [†] the wicked shall not rest upon the lot of the righteous;[‡] lest the righteous put forth their hands unto iniquity.

4 [b] Do good, O LORD, unto those that be good, and to them that are upright in their hearts.

5 [c] As for such as turn aside unto their crooked ways, the LORD shall lead them forth with the workers of iniquity: but peace shall be upon Israel.

[*] The Psalmist does not mean to assert the physical impossibility of removing mount Zion, for mightier works have been accomplished by human perseverance; but the moral impossibility, because it is still providentially guarded by the deep rooted conviction of its sacred character.—ED.

refuses the basest means of venting itself: and it is the saints' ordinary lot to be virulently reproached by the wicked. But dreadful, penetrating, destructive, furious, and lasting is the ruin of their reproachers at last! It is grievous for the lovers of God to be long removed from public ordinances, or to be forced by necessity into continued connexions with the wicked. But every one born of God ought to be a child of peace. Envy and strife are all from hell. And though others continue inveterate, we ought to abound in charity, and follow the things which make for peace.

REFLECTIONS UPON PSALM CXXI.—In every difficulty our eyes ought to be fixed on God, in his temple, his Christ, his heaven, as the author of our help, protection, and deliverance. He is a sure refuge to them who flee to him; and with him nothing is impossible. In him nothing good can be wanting, no direction, no preservation; and in him no troubles can hurt us.

REFLECTIONS UPON PSALM CXXII.—They who love God himself, cannot but delight to draw near unto him in the ordinances of his worship; cannot but love his church, and be earnestly concerned in prayer and in practice for her real welfare. From regard to the saints, who are therein begotten and nourished up to eternal life, and especially from regard to the honour of her God, they will constantly seek her good.

REFLECTIONS UPON PSALM CXXIII.—In what a humble, resigned, and obedient temper, and with what earnestness, ought we to look up to God for help and deliverance. While his great mercy encourages us, our great contempt and trouble should drive us to his throne of grace, and oblige us to wait upon him till he grant our requests.

REFLECTIONS UPON PSALM CXXIV.—How furiously the enemies of the church rage against her, and threaten to carry all before them! But power and policy in vain unite to destroy the souls which God will save. And when we are in appearance nearest to be overcome and perish, then shall we be made more eminently to experience the salvation of God.

REFLECTIONS UPON PSALM CXXV.—Happy are they who trust in the Lord!

PSALM CXXVI.

A Psalm of joy for deliverance from captivity.

¶ A a SONG OF DEGREES.

A. M. cir. 3469. B. C. cir. 535.

WHEN* the LORD [b]turned again the captivity of Zion, we were like them that dream.

2 Then was our mouth filled with laughter, and our tongue with singing: then said they among the heathen, The LORD †hath done great things for them.

3 The LORD hath done great things for us, whereof we are glad.

4 [c]Turn again our captivity, O LORD, as the streams in the south.‡

5 They that sow in tears shall reap in §joy.

6 He that goeth forth and weepeth, bearing ‖precious seed, shall doubtless come again with rejoicing, bringing his sheaves with him.

a Ps. cxx—cxxxiv, titles.

* When—the when in this verse, like the now in Ps. 124. 1. is confined to no special period; for the whole history of Israel, from the moment they became a people, has been a history of captivities in the hands of enemies, and merciful deliverances by the hand of their God.—ED.

Immovable is their new covenant state. They are established, guarded, and protected by God; and, in performance of his promise, he will supply them with everything good. But dreadful and lasting is their misery who apostatize from him to the paths of wickedness!

REFLECTIONS UPON PSALM CXXVI.—God's church is often in great tribulation for a time: and no deliverance comes till God himself effect it. Noted deliverances make observers to wonder, and saints to rejoice. But the more his people are now exercised in spiritual mourning, the more remarkable shall be their fruits of holiness and joy.

REFLECTIONS UPON PSALM CXXVII.—The less we depend upon our own schemes, or lean to our own understanding, and the more we look up to God for help and direction, the better shall we prosper. The most prudent projects and plans, the most anxious cares, and the most toilsome labours, are all to no purpose without God's blessing. But happy in their rest, and happier in their dutiful children, are they whom he blesses.

REFLECTIONS UPON PSALM CXXVIII.—How excellent and profitable is real and experimental godliness, issuing in a holy practice! It draws the blessing of God upon our labours, our families, on the church of God, and on our posterity.

REFLECTIONS UPON PSALM CXXIX.—In every age the seed of the serpent has raged in enmity against Jesus Christ and his church. There is no going honourably to heaven but through great tribulation. But let the wicked lay their plots, and execute them as they will, God will deliver his people at his pleasure; and his enemies shall plunge themselves at last into the most dreadful disappointment and ruin. The curse of God shall blast them, with all their schemes and attempts

REFLECTIONS UPON PSALM CXXX.—In the most fearful manner God often corrects his own children in their way to his kingdom. But while there is a praying heart within them, and a prayer-hearing God above them, there is no ground of despair. Sense of guilt is the first thing that strikes the mind of a convinced sinner; and did not God manifest his forgiving mercy, it would drive him to despair. But the faith of God's forgiving our sins, for Christ's sake, bestirs a Jehovah blessed for ever.

¶ a A SONG OF DEGREES.

BEHOLD, bless ye the LORD, all ye servants of the LORD, which by night [*] stand in the house of the LORD.

2 Lift up your hands [†] in the sanctuary, and bless the LORD.

3 The LORD, that made heaven and earth, [b] bless thee out of Zion.

PSALM CXXXV.

The praises of Jehovah in grace, nature, and providence.

A. M. cir. 2988. B. C. cir. 1016.

PRAISE ye the LORD. Praise ye the name [*] of the LORD; praise him, O ye servants of the LORD.

2 Ye that stand [†] in the house of the LORD, in the courts of the house of our God, holy awe of, regard to, and earnest waiting for him. And the more we taste of God's forgiving and redeeming goodness, the more shall we encourage others to flee to him, and hope in him, in the time of great guilt and trouble. And not only is God ready to, but he certainly will, accomplish the perfect redemption of all his people from sin and all its consequences.

3 Praise the LORD; for the LORD is good: sing praises unto his name; for it is pleasant.

REFLECTIONS UPON PSALM CXXXI.—Humility is the ornament of every station. A child-like spirit, meek and weaned from the things of this world, is a good symptom of a gracious heart. But to wade out of our depth, either in religion, learning, or power, is dangerous. And proud looks show a proud heart. If we are in trouble, let us patiently hope and wait till God bring us out of it. They who hope in Jesus Christ, and wait for his salvation, shall partake of it in time and in eternity.

REFLECTIONS UPON PSALM CXXXII.—Great is the mercy to have fervent prayers of our own, or of our ancestors, lying before God's throne of grace. They shall receive a gracious answer at last. Lively and zealous saints can never be at ease till the ordinances of God be regularly and honourably settled, and his presence vouchsafed, to the comfort and edification of both ministers and people. However meanly the ark of God, or even Jesus Christ himself, reside for a time, its dwelling shall at last, and for ever, be glorious. Multitudes shall flock to it; and great fellowship with God shall be there enjoyed. Happy was David's family and kingdom on Christ's account: but infinitely happier in this is the family and church of God. In virtue of JEHOVAH'S new covenant with him, his people are blessed with his presence, and with spiritual dignity, provision, salvation, and joy; while Jesus himself triumphs in everlasting honours, and his enemies are reduced to disappointment, misery and shame.

REFLECTIONS UPON PSALM CXXXIII.—Scarcely anything more ruinous hath befallen the church of God than the manifold divisions, disputes, and animosities of her members. Since God's children have one Father, one Lord, one faith, one baptism, they ought to have one heart and mind; to be united in the same worship, and affectionate in their regards to bearing with, forbearing, and forgiving one another; and only jealous who shall show the most abundant meekness, charity, and kindness to each other: this would mark them as anointed by the Spirit of Christ; would be refreshing and fructifying to their hearts and lives; and prepare them for the eternal life and blessedness above.

REFLECTIONS UPON PSALM CXXXIV.—How constant and active ought ministers to be in their service of Christ and his church! how remarkably given to prayer and praise! And the more men wait upon God, the more they shall find the blessedness of his service. But it is only as enthroned in Zion, in his temple, in Christ, and his church, that God bestows his salvation.

PSALM CXXXVIII.

A psalm of praise.

¶ A PSALM OF DAVID

I [a] WILL praise thee with my whole heart: [b] before the gods will I sing[*] praise unto thee.

2 [c] I will worship toward thy holy temple, [‖] and praise thy name for thy loving-kindness and for thy truth: for [*] thou hast magnified thy word above all thy name.[†]

3 [f] In the day when I cried thou answeredst me, and [g] strengthenedst me with strength in my soul.

4 [h] All the kings of the earth shall praise thee, O LORD, when they hear the words of thy mouth.

5 Yea, they shall sing in the ways of the LORD: for great is the glory of the LORD.

6 [i] Though the LORD be high, yet hath he respect unto the lowly: but the proud he knoweth afar off.[‡]

7 Though I walk in the midst of trouble, thou wilt revive me: thou shalt stretch forth thine hand against the wrath of mine enemies, and thy right hand shall save me.

8 The LORD will perfect that which concerneth me:[§] thy mercy, O LORD, endureth for ever: forsake not the works of thine own hands.

PSALM CXXXIX.

The omnipresence and omniscience of God.

¶ TO THE CHIEF MUSICIAN, A PSALM OF DAVID.

O [a] LORD, thou hast searched me, and known me.

2 Thou knowest my [b] down-sitting, and mine up-rising; [c] thou understandest my thought afar off.[*]

3 Thou [d] compassest my path, and my lying down, and art [*] acquainted with all my ways.

4 For there is not a word in my tongue, but, lo, O LORD, [f] thou knowest it altogether.

5 [g] Thou hast beset me behind and before, and laid thine hand upon me.

6 [h] Such knowledge is too wonderful for me; it is high, I cannot attain [†] unto it.

7 [i] Whither shall I go from thy Spirit?[‡] or whither shall I flee from thy presence?

8 [k] If I ascend up into heaven, thou art there: if I make my bed in hell,[§] [‖] behold, thou art there.

9 If I take the [‖] wings of the morning, and dwell in the uttermost parts of the sea;

10 Even there shall thy hand lead me, and thy right hand shall hold me.

11 If I say, Surely the darkness shall cover me; [m] even the night shall be light about me.

12 Yea, the darkness [*] hideth not from thee; but the night shineth as the day: [†] the darkness and the light are both alike to thee.[‡]

13 For [n] thou hast possessed my reins:[§] thou hast covered me in my mother's womb.

14 I will praise thee; for I am fearfully and wonderfully made: marvellous are thy works; and that my soul knoweth [‖] right well.

15 [o] My [*] substance was not hid from thee, when I was made in [p] secret, and curiously wrought in the lowest parts of the earth.

16 Thine eyes did see my substance, yet being unperfect; and in thy book [†] all my members were written, [‡] which in continuance were fashioned, when as yet there was none of them.[§]

17 How precious also are thy thoughts unto me, O God! how great is the sum of [‡] them!

18 If I should count them, they are more in number than the sand: [q] when I awake, I am still with thee.

19 Surely thou wilt slay the wicked, O God: [r] depart from me therefore, ye bloody men.

20 [s] For they speak against thee wickedly, and thine enemies take thy name in vain.

21 [t] Do not I hate them, O LORD, that hate thee? and am not I grieved with those that rise up against thee?

REFLECTIONS UPON PSALM CXXXVII.—The sins of God's people often reduce them to great misery on earth. They are often taught the worth of ordinances by the want of them: and their temple songs are turned into howlings and grief. But cruel are the tender mercies of the wicked to God's suffering saints. And it is base and blasphemous to insult them with their worshipping of God. Sacred songs ill suit the call or company of profane scoffers. That which is holy ought not to be given to dogs, nor pearls cast before swine. The interest of Jesus' church and kingdom must ever be dearer to us than our life: and, if duty be once clear, nothing must deter us from it. Not selfish revenge, but holy zeal, must dictate our requests for the destruction of the church's enemies. Malicious and inhuman is their wickedness, and tremendous and correspondent is the punishment of it!

REFLECTIONS UPON PSALM CXXXVIII.—The greatest on earth need not be ashamed of the public and regular worship of God. And the more he manifests his loving-kindness and faithfulness in the fulfilment of his word to us, the more high and hearty ought to be our notes of praise. If we trust to his truth, he will display every perfection, and make every creature to work together for the glorious accomplishment of his word. If we flee to God in prayer, he will not leave us destitute. And if he, by our afflictions, strengthen us inwardly in our souls, we are great gainers. The cheerful behaviour of saints, in the ways of God, engages their neighbours to join with them in it. And the more humble men are, the more God regards and exalts them. And nothing is more detestable to him than indulged pride. Whatever trouble God casts his people into, he will protect and preserve them in it. And the good works of grace or salvation, which he begins, he will perfect at last. He will never leave nor forsake his own. Let us then trust in him at all times, and pour out our hearts before him.

PSALM CXL.

A prayer for deliverance from deceit and violence.

¶ TO THE CHIEF MUSICIAN, A PSALM OF DAVID.

DELIVER me,* O LORD, from the evil man: preserve me from the [a] violent man;

2 Which imagine mischiefs in their heart: continually are they gathered together for war.

3 [b] They have sharpened their tongues like a serpent: adders' poison is under their lips. Selah.

4 Keep me, O LORD, from the hands of the wicked; preserve me from the violent man, who have purposed to overthrow my goings.

5 The proud have hid a snare for me, and cords; they have spread a net by the way-side; they have set gins for me. Selah.†

6 I said unto the LORD, Thou art my God: hear the voice of my supplications, O LORD.

7 O GOD the Lord, the strength of my salvation, thou hast covered my head in the day of battle.

8 Grant not, O LORD, the desires of the wicked: further not his wicked device, [c] lest they exalt themselves. Selah.

9 As for the head of those that compass me about, let the mischief of their own lips cover them.‡

10 [d] Let burning coals fall upon them: let them be cast into the fire; into deep pits, that they rise not up again.§

11 Let not [e] ‖ an evil-speaker* be established in the earth: evil shall hunt the violent man to overthrow him.

12 I know that the LORD will maintain the cause of the afflicted, and the right of the poor.

13 Surely the righteous shall give thanks unto thy name: the upright shall dwell in thy presence.

* "Of whom speaketh the prophet this? of himself, or of some other man? (Acts 8. 34.) Let the prayerful inquirer consult Ps. 40, interpreted by Heb. 10. 5; then comp. Ps. 2. 4, interpreted by Acts 4. 26, with Ps. 59. 8, and consider its prayer for deliverance, compared with the similar prayer of this Psalm, (see also Psalms xliii, lix, lxiv, lxxi.)—and the parallelism, nay the identity of the descriptions and petitions, must point to Messiah in the days of his flesh, as the speaker in this Psalm. The chief object of the prayer, is deliverance from Judas and his employers, the high priest and Pharisees, and from Antichrist, that wicked one, (2 Thes. 2. 8.) and his persecuting followers in apostate Babylon.—Ed.

* This prayer against an evil-speaker, an inculcator of false doctrines and immoral practices, a calumniator, or a railer against lawful authorities, is usually so visibly fulfilled that the influence derived from such practices has never, in the mercy of heaven, been permitted to continue for many successive years.—Ed.

Reflections upon Psalm CXXXIX.—In the faith of these things let me always live, and always act, whether in religious or in civil affairs, under the deepest impressions of God's eyes upon me, his perfect knowledge of my heart, my thoughts, and deeds; of his all-filling presence ever with me, to witness, support, or comfort me; of his marvellous formation of me in nature and grace; of his new covenant marriage to me, and his everlasting redemption of my soul. Let my whole life, night and day, be filled up with precious, fixed, and delightful thoughts concerning these things, and with holy improvements of them. Let me never make the Lord's enemies my intimates. They who hate God hate his name and image wherever it appears. Let me therefore hate the ways of sinners, while I have true love and pity to their souls. And let a thorough cleansing from sin, and progress in holiness, be the earnest desire and ineffable delight of my soul.

Reflections upon Psalm CXL.—Behold, as in a glass, how maliciously Jesus Christ was reproached and persecuted; how he gave himself to prayer on account of it; and how the vengeance of God overtook his Jewish murderers and persecutors! Let us likewise observe, that sin turns men into a kind of devils, in deceit, malice, and diligence in evil, and in inveterate opposition to the people of God. But the saints may attain, even amidst their troubles, to the most pleasant prayers and praises; for God terribly resents the injuries done to his people; and kindly will he maintain their cause, and for their protection afford them his presence.

PSALM CXLI.

A prayer for acceptance and grace, and deliverance from the snares of the wicked.

¶ A PSALM OF DAVID.

LORD, [a] I cry unto thee: make haste unto me;* give ear unto my voice, when I cry unto thee.

2 Let my prayer be † set forth before thee as incense; and the lifting up of my hands as the evening sacrifice.

3 [b] Set a watch, O LORD, before my mouth; keep the door of my lips.

5 § Let the righteous smite me;‖ it shall be a kindness: and let him reprove me; it shall be an excellent oil, which shall not break my head: for yet my prayer also shall be in their calamities.

¶ MASCHIL OF DAVID; A PRAYER WHEN HE WAS IN THE CAVE.

I CRIED* unto the LORD with my voice; with my voice unto the LORD did I make my supplication.

2 I poured out my complaint before him; I showed before him my trouble.

3 When my spirit was overwhelmed within me, then thou knewest my path: in the way wherein I walked have they privily laid a snare for me.

4 † I looked on my right hand, and beheld, but there was no man that would know me:

* This is a specimen of those "prayers and supplications, with strong crying and tears," which Christ offered up "in the days of his flesh" to "Him that was able to save him, and was heard in that he feared," Heb. 5. 7. If any desire more evidence of Christ speaking in these words, let them examine Psalms 16th, 31st, 34th, & 69th, which various quotations in the New Testament have, by the Spirit, been interpreted of him; and their parallelism with this Psalm, must equally assign it to Messiah.—Ed.

† Or, look on the right hand and see.

Reflections upon Psalm CXLI.—A deep sense of need will make us importunate in prayer for speedy help, gracious acceptance, direction, preservation, and merciful restraints. Faithful and Christian reproof is a necessary and kind office of friendship. And to love reproof, and be thankful for it, is one of the surest symptoms of a gracious heart. But that reproof will be most effectual which comes from those whose unsuspected piety gives weight to their words, and whose tender manner of applying it renders it soft and penetrating. For men to pray to be put right, and yet to be displeased with rebuke for what is wrong, is base dissimulation. Often people never regard God's candidates for the magistracy or ministry, till their own be destroyed or shamefully disgraced. But let the case of the church or saints be ever so deplorable, fervent prayers will soon render 6 Attend unto my cry; for [c] I am brought very low: [d] deliver me from my persecutors; for they are stronger than I.

7 [e] Bring my soul out of prison, that I may praise thy name: the righteous shall compass me about; for thou shalt deal bountifully with me.

PSALM CXLIII.

A prayer for speedy deliverance from enemies.

¶ A PSALM OF DAVID

HEAR [a] my prayer, O LORD; give ear to my supplications: in thy faithfulness answer me, and in thy righteousness.[*]

2 [b] And enter not into judgment with thy servant: for in thy sight shall no man living be justified.[†]

3 [c] For the enemy hath persecuted my soul; he hath smitten my life down to the ground; he hath made me to dwell in darkness, as those that have been long dead.

4 Therefore is my spirit overwhelmed within me; my heart within me is desolate.

5 [d] I remember the days of old; I meditate on all thy works; I muse on the work of thy hands.

6 I stretch forth my hands unto thee: [e] my soul thirsteth after thee, as a thirsty land. Selah.[‡]

7 Hear me speedily, O LORD; my spirit faileth: hide not thy face from me, [f] lest I be like unto them that go down into the pit.

8 Cause me to hear thy loving-kindness in the morning; [g] for in thee do I trust: [h] cause me to know the way wherein I should walk; for I lift up my soul unto thee.

9 Deliver me, O LORD, from mine enemies: I [*] flee unto thee to hide me.

10 Teach [†] me to do thy will; for thou art my God: [i] thy Spirit is good, lead me into the land of uprightness.

11 [k] Quicken me, [‡] O LORD, for thy name's sake: for thy righteousness' sake bring my soul out of trouble.

12 [l] And of thy mercy cut off mine enemies, and destroy all them that afflict my soul: for I am thy servant.

¶ A PSALM OF DAVID

BLESSED be the LORD [a] my strength, [b] which teacheth my hands [*] to war, [†] and my fingers to fight.

2 [c] [‡] My goodness, and my fortress; my high tower, and my deliverer; my shield, and he in whom I trust; who subdueth my people under me.

3 [d] LORD, what is man, that thou takest knowledge of him! or the son of man, that thou makest account of him! [§]

4 [*] Man is like to vanity: his days are as a shadow that passeth away.

5 [f] Bow thy heavens, O LORD, and come down: touch the mountains, and they shall smoke.[‖]

6 [g] Cast forth lightning, and scatter them: [*] shoot out thine arrows, and destroy them.

7 Send thine [†] hand from above; rid me, and deliver me out of great waters, from the hand of strange children;

8 [h] Whose mouth speaketh vanity; and their right hand is a right hand of falsehood.

9 [i] I will sing a new song unto thee, O God: upon a psaltery and an instrument of ten strings will I sing praises unto thee.

10 It is he that giveth [‡] salvation unto kings; who delivereth [§] David his servant from the hurtful sword.

11 [k] Rid me, and deliver me from the hand of strange children, whose mouth speaketh vanity, and their right hand [‖] is a right hand of falsehood:

12 That our sons may be as plants grown up in their youth; that our daughters may be as corner-stones, [*] polished after the similitude of a palace;

13 That our garners may be full, affording [†] all manner of store; that our sheep may bring forth thousands and ten thousands in our streets;

14 That our oxen may be [‡] strong to labour; that there be no breaking in, nor going out; that there be no complaining in our streets.[l] it hopeful. And if our eyes be fixed on God, our feet shall not slip. But the destruction of the wicked is determined, and their devices to hurt others shall but hasten their own wretchedness.

REFLECTIONS UPON PSALM CXLII.—Sore troubles ought to produce fervent prayers. They who have the God of all grace to flee to, may safely leave in his hand all their troubles. And when our consciences condemn us not, then have we confidence before him. We can never be brought so low but God can help us. If men forsake or disregard us, God, as our refuge and portion, will more than balance our want. If we are even fettered in the bands of corruption, temptation, or trouble, he can deliver us. And the mercies which our brethren enjoy should excite our praises, as members of the same body.

REFLECTIONS UPON PSALM CXLIII.—If ever we hope for God's acceptance of us, it must not be for anything in us, but purely of grace, for his dear Son's sake, according to the promises of his word. The most righteous cannot bear the severity of God's justice. They who best know their own hearts will ever be the first to condemn themselves, and to cry for mercy at God's hand. And they who plead guilty before the law, and flee to the grace of the gospel in Christ, shall be justified from all things. When our distress is greatest, God's power and grace shall be the more magnified in our deliverance. Though it be hard to exercise courageous faith under sore troubles, yet remembrance of God's kindness, to ourselves or others, in former times, is very encouraging. And they who thirst for his presence, favour, and love, shall never be sent away empty from his throne of grace; whatever manifestations of mercy, direction, instruction, deliverance, guidance, quickening for themselves, and destruction of enemies, they may ask.

REFLECTIONS UPON PSALM CXLIV.—Behold, as in a figure, Jesus Christ, the darling of heaven, advanced by his Father to his right hand, and invested with all power in heaven and in earth! There he rejoices in his God, and in his

PSALM CXLV.

A song of praise, or petition without complaint.

¶ a DAVID'S PSALM OF PRAISE.

I WILL extol thee,* my God, O King; and I will bless thy name† for ever and ever.

2 Every day will I bless thee; and I will praise thy name for ever and ever.

3 Great is the LORD, and greatly to be praised; ‡ and his greatness § is unsearchable.

4 [b] One generation shall praise thy works to another, and shall declare thy mighty acts.

5 I will speak of the glorious honour of thy majesty, and of thy wondrous [c] works.

6 And men shall speak of the might of thy terrible acts; and I will [d] declare thy greatness.

7 They shall abundantly [e] utter the memory of thy great goodness, and shall sing of thy righteousness.

8 The LORD is gracious, and full of compassion; slow to anger, and ‖ of great mercy.

9 The LORD is good to all;* and his tender mercies † are over all his works.

10 [f] All thy works shall praise thee, O LORD; and thy saints shall bless thee.

11 They shall speak of the glory of thy kingdom, and talk of thy power;

13 Thy kingdom is ‡ an everlasting kingdom, and thy dominion endureth throughout all generations.

14 [g] The LORD upholdeth all that fall, and raiseth up all those that be bowed down.

15 The eyes of all § wait upon thee; and thou givest them their meat in due season.

18 [i] The LORD is nigh* unto all them that call upon him, to all that call upon him in truth.

* The grammar of the Psalm, as seen in the phrase "our God," (ver. 1, 5, 7.) discovers the speaker to be the church in her collective and corporate capacity, calling upon her several members to the delightful work of praise — a work pleasant to the heart of those engaged in it, and comely in the eyes of saints and angels.—ED.

† All the works ascribed to the Lord, throughout the Psalm, are works that he is always doing. Accordingly, after every siege and demolition, God, by his providence, immediately proceeded to build up Jerusalem again, his architectural witness to all nations: and "the outcasts of Israel" he has always continued to gather, temporally, into separate and cohesive communities; and spiritually, into one body and temple in Christ Jesus. REFLECTIONS UPON PSALM CXLVI.—Happy are they whose God is the Lord, and whose praises never end! But the greatest on earth appear as insignificant nothings before God, or even to a gracious heart. Nothing on earth is properly a man's property but his grave. But though in man there be no help, no ground of hope, our God-man is mighty to save; and hope in him knows no disappointment. Be stirred up therefore, my soul, to depend on him, who is my almighty Maker, my faithful and promise-performing Friend, my kind and righteous Protector, my bountiful Provider, my omnipotent Deliverer, my gracious Enlightener, my seasonable Restorer, my perpetual Preserver, and the just Punisher of my enemies;—my King, my God, and my ALL.

3 Praise ye him, sun and moon: praise him, all ye stars of light.

4 Praise him, ye heavens of heavens, and ye waters that be above the heavens.

5 Let them praise the name of the LORD: [b] for he commanded, and they were created.

6 He hath also stablished them for ever and ever:§ he hath made a decree which shall not pass.

7 Praise the LORD from the earth, ye dragons, and all deeps:

8 Fire, and hail; snow, and vapours; stormy wind fulfilling his word;

9 Mountains, and all hills; fruitful trees, and all cedars;

10 Beasts, and all cattle; creeping things, and flying fowl;

11 [c] Kings of the earth, and all people; princes, and all judges of the earth;

12 [d] Both young men and maidens; old men and children:

13 Let them praise the name of the LORD: [e] for his name alone is * excellent; his glory is above the earth and heaven.

14 [f] He also exalteth the horn of his people, the praise of all his saints; even of the children of Israel, a people [g] near unto him. Praise ye the LORD.

PSALM CXLIX.

A song of praise.

PRAISE [a] ye the LORD. Sing unto the LORD a new* song, and his praise in the congregation of saints.†

2 Let [b] Israel‡ rejoice in him that made him: let the children of Zion§ be joyful in their King.

3 Let them praise his name ‖ in the dance:* let them sing praises unto him with the timbrel and harp.

4 For the LORD taketh pleasure in his people: [c] he will beautify the meek with salvation.

5 Let the saints be joyful in glory: let them sing aloud [d] upon their beds.†

6 Let the high praises of God be in their ‡ mouth, and a two-edged sword§ in their hand;

7 To execute vengeance upon the heathen, and punishments upon the people;

8 To bind their kings with chains, and their nobles with fetters of iron;

9 To execute upon them the judgment written:‖ this honour have all his saints. Praise ye the LORD.

PSALM CL.

A Psalm of praise.

PRAISE [a] ye the LORD. Praise God in his sanctuary:* praise him in [b] the firmament of his power.

2 Praise him [c] for his mighty acts: praise him according to his excellent greatness.†

3 Praise him with the sound of the ‡ trumpet: praise him with the psaltery and harp.§

4 Praise him with the timbrel and ‖ dance: praise him with stringed instruments and organs.

5 Praise him upon the loud cymbals: praise him upon the high-sounding cymbals.

6 Let every thing that hath breath praise the LORD. Praise ye the LORD.

REFLECTIONS UPON PSALM CXLVII.—How good and great must God be in himself, when his greatness, wisdom, power, and goodness, are so manifested in all his works. And when he so observes and provides for all his creatures, how impossible is it that his ransomed children should be overlooked or starved! Much of God is to be seen in all around us—in luminaries, in animals, in crops, in seasons, in human persons or societies; but, above all, in his church and in his word. If these be abused by us, it will be more tolerable for Sodom and Gomorrah in the day of judgment than for us.

REFLECTIONS UPON PSALM CXLVIII.—How great and good must God appear to his people, when their minds are so overcharged with their debt of praise! And indeed, had the praises of God but due room on earth, it would much resemble heaven. But none are more deep in the debt of praise than ransomed men; sometime afar off, but now brought near to him by the blood of his Son!

REFLECTIONS UPON PSALM CXLIX.—Behold here Jesus, and his gospel church chiefly in her millennial state. He and his people mutually rejoice in one another:—while they praise him, he imparts the blessings of salvation to them; and, while he goes forth in his chariots of salvation, conquering sinners by his grace, or in his chariots of vengeance, to destroy his Jewish, Heathen, and Antichristian enemies, by their prayers and influence, they work together with him.

REFLECTIONS UPON PSALM CL.—Happy are they who dwell in God's house above—they are always praising him on the highest key! And happy are they who are on the way to it—they have always matter, and often a heart, for praise.

CONCLUDING REMARKS ON THE BOOK OF PSALMS.

The Hebrew title of the Book of Psalms is "Praises;" because the praise of God as Creator, Upholder, and Governor—as Father, Redeemer, and Sanctifier—constitutes their principal subject. The Greek title, whence our English name, "Psalms," is derived from the Septuagint, and describes these sacred compositions as accompanied by musical instruments. And this accompaniment was in accordance with the law of Moses, (Lev. 23. 24, &c.), and the ritual appointed by divine revelation in the days of David and Solomon, 1 Chr. 16.

But while praise is justly due to God as Creator, Upholder, and Governor of the world, much more is it due to him as Father, Redeemer, and Sanctifier. And, as God the Father is made known and glorified by the Son; and, as the Spirit glorifies both Father and Son, by taking "the things of Christ and showing them" to believers—so it was to be expected that Christ, the beloved Son of God, the Messiah, the Saviour of sinners, would furnish the chief subject of praise in the heart and the songs of the church. Accordingly we have seen that the Psalms are full of Christ,—the church on earth strictly imitating the church in heaven, in asserting that "Worthy is the Lamb that was slain, to receive power, and riches, and wisdom, and strength, and honour, and glory, and blessing;" and in ascribing "blessing, and honour, and glory, and power, unto Him that sitteth upon the throne, and unto the Lamb, for ever and ever."

The Psalms constitute the great storehouse of prayer in every mood and condition of the spirit. "Is any merry—let him sing Psalms." Is any sad—they will teach him to cry from the depths of affliction. Is any persecuted—they will furnish him with petitions for a refuge and deliverance. Is any in want—they will lead him to the friend of the poor and needy. Is any in sickness—they will lead him the way to the true Physician. Is any dying and in misery—they will show him the path of life, ending in fulness of joy at the right hand of the Eternal. And all this they do, because they are the spiritual revelations of the "supplications, strong crying and tears" of Jesus in the days of his flesh; and therefore furnish to his disciples the model and the material of their prayers of faith.

The writers of some of the Psalms are known, and the Jews enumerate ten. But this is of little importance—for that the author of all was the Spirit of God, we have the fullest evidence. Thus, independently of that heavenly character which bears witness of their heavenly origin—we have, in the New Testament, more frequent attestations of their divine origin, than for any other book of the whole Scripture collection. They are at least fifty times quoted by our Lord or his apostles. And, besides furnishing to our Lord the most powerful of his arguments against the unbelieving Jews, they also furnished him the words in which, upon the cross, he both prayed and expired.

According to the Masoretic copies and the Syriac version, the Psalms are divided into five books; the first extending from the 1st to 40th. The second from the 41st to 72d. The third from the 73d to 89th. The fourth from the 90th to 106th; and the fifth from the 107th to 150th. The first four of these end with "Amen and Amen." The last with "Hallelujah." This division was very ancient, as it evidently existed before the Septuagint translation.

Most of the Psalms have titles prefixed, which by some, as ancient traditionary expositions of the contents, are held in high esteem, and considered as endued with a kind of canonical authority. But some of the highest authorities amongst the ancient Christian writers—as Augustine and Theodoret—have freely admitted that these titles have often no relation to the body of the Psalm, and seldom contribute anything to the discovery of the meaning. In their great obscurity, all are agreed; and conjectural meanings are so various that they cease to be of value. These titles have, accordingly, been retained, partly out of respect to those that, in any degree, value them; and partly as mere relics of antiquity, esteemed not for any intrinsic worth, but as samples and memorials of the works of other times.

That the Psalms are occasionally prophetical of Christ, no Christian can overlook or deny. That but few, however, are thus prophetical of him, has been an opinion extensively circulated and received,—the number of such specially prophetic Psalms being ordinarily confined to the 2d, 16th, 22d, 40th, 45th, 68th, 72d, 87th, 110th, and 118th. But were the correctness of this meagre enumeration admitted, still the real relation of the Psalms to Christ remains unsettled. For the real question is, not how many Psalms are prophetical, but how many are descriptive of Christ, and proved to be descriptive of him, because they apply accurately to him, and however they may be strained by the efforts of "accommodation," still utterly refuse to become applicable to any other. Could we conclude with Origen, Chrysostom, Theodoret, Augustine, Ambrose, Euthymius, and others of the ancient Christian writers, that David was the author of all the Psalms—or admitting, as is commonly believed, that other inspired authors wrote a part of the collection—yet could we accurately ascertain how many were composed by David—and it is upon all hands admitted that he composed a large portion—we would then be able, upon David's own authority, or rather upon that of the Spirit speaking by him, greatly to extend, if not to universalize, the prophetic boundaries of the Psalms. For that the Psalms written by David himself were prophetic, we have David's own authority, which, as Horsley observes, may be allowed to overpower a host of modern expositors. For thus king David, at the close of his life, describes himself and his sacred songs: "David the son of Jesse said, and the man who was raised up on high, the anointed of the God of Jacob, and the sweet Psalmist of Israel said, the Spirit of Jehovah spake by me, and his word was my tongue." 2 Sam. 23. 1, 2. It was the word, therefore, of Jehovah's Spirit which was uttered by David's tongue. But it should seem the Spirit of Jehovah would not be wanting to enable a mere man to make complaint of his own enemies, to describe his own sufferings just as he felt them, and his own escapes just as they happened. But the Spirit of Jehovah described, by David's utterance, what was known to that Spirit only, and that Spirit only could describe. So that if David be allowed to have had any knowledge of the true subject of his own compositions, it was nothing in his own life, but something put into his mind by the Holy Spirit of God; and the misapplication of the Psalms to the literal David has done more mischief than the misapplication of any other parts of the Scriptures, among those who profess the belief of the Christian religion.* Nor do we hesitate to express our firm conviction; that a right interpretation of the Psalms, whereby Christ is so clearly discovered in his person, his offices, his passion, his victories, his glories, and his judgment, will bring a light, a comfort, and a joy, to the heart of the believer, unknown while darkness lay upon this blessed portion of the Sacred Volume.—Ed.

ADDITIONAL EDITORIAL NOTES ON THE BOOK OF PSALMS.

Psalm II. Ver. 1. Why do the heathen rage?—The heathen nations being madly attached to idolatry, and the Jewish people to self-righteousness, united in opposition to Christ, (Acts 4. 26); and, for the same reasons, all who inherit their principles still persevere in the same opposition.——Ver. 2. The kings of the earth set themselves, &c.—"Array, or marshal" their hosts—their military power, and cruel legal enactments and agents, as in the Jewish and Roman persecutions of the early Christians, or the terrible machinery of the Inquisition, in the later days of the Reformation.

Psalm VIII. Ver. 5. A little lower than the angels.—The quotation of ver. 2, by our Lord, (Mat. 11. 25. and Heb. 2. 6, 7.) evidences, beyond all doubt, that it is a description of Christ.

Psalm XIX. Ver. 1. Firmament.—The expanse—the whole outspreading of the heavens.

Psalm XXIV. Ver. 6. O Jacob.—Jacob, being interpreted, signifies supplanter; and he supplanted profane Esau by purchasing the blessing. As such, the name is an appropriate title of Christ, who purchased the heirship of all things at the cost of his own blood. 1 Cor. 6. 20. & 7. 23.——Selah.—See note on Ps. 3. 2.——Ver. 9. Lift up your heads, O ye gates; even lift them up, ye everlasting doors; and the King of glory shall come in.—The gates and doors are twice summoned, because Christ has two entrances into glory; one after his resurrection, when he entered alone, "mighty in battle," (ver. 8.); the other after the resurrection of his saints, when he enters with them and his angels, "Lord of hosts," Mat. 16. 27.

Psalm XXV. Ver. 2. Let not mine enemies triumph over me.—He that would discover the speaker in this Psalm, requires, as in other cases, to search the Scriptures, and compare spiritual with spiritual. Accordingly let him prayerfully and candidly consult Ps. 40. 11, and compare the same with Ps. 25. 7—11, and it must be confessed they are alike. Then let him turn to Heb. 10. 5, and compare the same with Ps. 40. 6—8, and he will find that he who confesses his iniquities, is no other than Christ; no other than he, who though he "knew no sin," yet "bore all our sins in his own body;" yea, upon whom "the Lord laid the iniquities of us all."

Psalm XXVII. Ver. 2. My foes came upon me to eat up my flesh.—When Satan, who has the power of death, (Heb. 2. 14.) and the high priest, who had the power of indictment, and Pilate who had the power of condemnation, came against me, to deliver me up to the devouring grave.

Psalm XXIX. Ver. 11. The Lord will bless his people with peace.—Life, at best, is a variable climate, and visited by many storms. Still the man justified by faith enjoys peace of conscience; and, when the storms of life are over, all will be calm in heaven.

Psalm XXXII. Ver. 3. When I kept silence.—Upon two remarkable occasions Christ kept silence. Before the treacherous and guilty accusers of the woman, (John 8. 6—8.); and again, before Caiaphas and Pilate, (Mat. 26. 63. & 27. 14.) as it had been prophesied, Is. 53. 7. While he thus kept silence for a little from reproving hypocrites, or instructing and comforting penitents, or from defending himself against false accusations, his bones waxed old—premature old age came on—through the previous and subsequent roaring, which, with this brief interval, his sorrows wrung from him all the day long.

Psalm XXXVIII. Ver. 1. O Lord, rebuke me not in thy wrath; neither chasten me in thy hot displeasure.—There is not on record such another memorial of affliction as we find presented in this Psalm. The wrath and arrows of the Almighty—a body racked with disease and pain—an agonized spirit, the desertion of friends—the plottings and assaults of inveterate enemies—all concentrate upon one sufferer. And who is he that can sustain the assault? Surely this can be none but the "man of sorrows," whom "it pleased the Lord to bruise."

Psalm XL. Ver. 1. I waited patiently for the Lord.—It is here to be remarked, as in several other Psalms, that the speaker is one; and that the Holy Spirit, speaking by Paul, (Heb. 10. 5—9.) declares this one to be Christ. But when Christ is found to be the speaker in one part, he must, if there be any confidence in the grammar of any language, be the speaker in the whole Psalm.

Psalm XLVII. Ver. 9. The princes of the people are gathered together, even the people of the God of Abraham.—This verse carries us beyond the ascension, to a period when Jew and Gentile shall be "both one in Christ"—not merely in principle, as they are now, but in fact, according to the sure word of prophecy.

Psalm XLVIII. Ver. 8. In the city of our God: God will establish it for ever.—How can this be reconciled with the destruction of all things foretold, 2 Pet. 3. 7? Most easily: God will establish Zion for ever in the person of her King, in the happiness of her subjects, in the fulfilment of her prophecies, the realization of her types, the demonstration of her faith, the beauty of her holiness, and the brightness of her glory.

Psalm L. Ver. 8. I will not reprove thee for thy sacrifices or thy burnt-offerings, to have been continually before me.—Some forms of sacrifice, as the show-bread, were continually, that is, without interruption before God; others at short intervals, as the morning and evening sacrifice; others at longer intervals, as the passover, and sacrifices of atonement. But all were mere pictures, of which Christ was the great original—and those pictures are of no value before God, but as they testify to "Christ in us, the hope of glory."

Psalm LI. Ver. 1. According unto the multitude of thy tender mercies blot out my transgressions.—The Hebrew title attributes this Psalm to David penitentially bowing to the rebuke of Nathan, 2 Sam. 11, &c. Horsley however justly observes that this title cannot be correct, as ver. 4. describes the sin of the speaker as solely against God, whereas that of David was also against both Uriah and Bath-sheba. Who then is the speaker? The answer lies, (1) In comparing Ps. 40. 6, with Heb. 16. 6. and these with Ps. 51. 16. (2) From considering that, though Christ is certainly the speaker in Ps. 40, he nevertheless confesses the oppression of the "iniquities laid upon him," and in that just sense, calls them his own, in correspondence with Ps. 25. 11. & 32. 5. (3) That none but Christ could truly utter the perpetual view of sin described, (ver. 3.) "My sin is ever before me"—even the sin of his people which he bore, the defilement of which he ever saw, and the pressure of which he ever felt.

Psalm LVIII. Ver. 6.—Break their teeth, O God.—For explanation and vindication of this, and similar prayers in relation to the enemies of our Lord, see note on Ps. 5. 10. & 35. 8.

Psalm LX. Ver. 8. Moab is my washpot; over Edom will I cast out my shoe: Philistia, triumph thou because of me.—Washpot, or basin; not a phrase of contempt, or sign of servility, but rather of tender friendship and hospitable entertainment, See Luke 7. 44. John 13. 14, 15. ——Cast my shoe.—This phrase some interpret of taking possession; others of servile subjugation: is it not rather a token of friendly visitation, and peaceful entering into all the dwellings of the land, according to the eastern custom of putting off the shoes at the entrance of a dwelling or chamber?—Philistia! land of hereditary enemies, triumph in my victory of love that has conquered thy enmity.——Ver. 11. Vain is the help of man.—Hence we learn that the victory expected is not that which can be wrought by the power or wrath of man—and not a victory over the literal Moab, Edom, and Philistia, but a spiritual victory of truth and love over the enemies of Jesus, represented by those nations.

Psalm LXIII. Ver. 11. Every one that sweareth by him shall glory.—Every one that reverences his name, and acknowledges his omniscience and judgment.

Psalm LXV. Ver. 1. Praise waiteth for thee, O God, in Zion.—"Praise is silent for thee, O Lord;" silent, as if the heart of the church was too full of gratitude to find utterance; or, as an eastern servant, waiting in silence for a word or sign.

Psalm LXVI. Ver. 1. Make a joyful noise unto God, all ye lands.—From the beginning to verse 12, the plurality of the speakers, and the nature of the sentiments, sufficiently indicate the church engaged in the praises of her great King and Head.

Psalm LXXXIV. Ver. 7. Every one of them in Zion appeareth before God.—"The God of gods will appear to them."—Williams.——Ver. 8. Give ear, O God of Jacob.—See note on Ps. 81. 1. Christ here personally intercedes for the church, and him "the Father heareth always." John 11. 42.

Psalm LXXXVII. Ver. 1. His foundation is in the holy mountains.—The Lord's foundation is Christ, (1 Cor. 3. 10.) upon whom are builded, first apostles and prophets, then the whole church, Eph. 2. 20; and this foundation rests upon the mountains the high raised strength of the Redeemer's holiness, ver. 2. See Ps. 78. 68.

Psalm LXXXIX. Ver. 5. The heavens shall praise thy wonders, O Lord.—The comparison of this passage from verse 5—17, with Heb. 1. 10. & Ps. 102. 1, 25, will clearly demonstrate that it contains a continued address of the Father to the Son, delivered in prophecy for establishment of the faith of the ancient church. See Luke 1. 39.

Psalm XCIII. Ver. 1. The Lord reigneth.—The prophetic period to which this and some parallel Psalms refer can be easily ascertained from comparing them with Rev. 11. 17. & 19. 6; at which time God shall "take to him his mighty power and reign," and when all the things that are now temporary and moveable, shall pass under that "kingdom that cannot be moved." Heb. 12. 28.

Psalm C. Ver. 1. Make a joyful noise unto the Lord, all ye lands.—That this summons is not confined to "the land of Judea" is obvious from verse 4, in which the parties called are exhorted to enter Jehovah's courts. For, whereas the temple had within the gates an outward court, into which the Gentiles might freely enter—the converted Gentiles must here be united as "God's sheep and people" with the believing Jews. See John 10. 16. Is. 19. 25.

Psalm CXXVIII. Ver. 5. Thou shalt see the good of Jerusalem.—The believer always sees the good, even of the natural Jerusalem; he sees it in her present converts to Jesus, and her future restoration. Of the spiritual Jerusalem, the good is visible to sense, as well as to faith.

Psalm CXXXVI. Ver. 4. To him who alone doeth great wonders.—Miracles, as in Egypt—at the Red sea—and in the wilderness, where he fed his people with bread from heaven.

Psalm CXXXVII. Ver. 2. We hanged our harps upon the willows.—Babylon was a square 60 miles in circuit; its streets 15 miles in length. There will, therefore, be no difficulty in imagining how in so many squares as the city afforded, there would be a profusion of willows for the harps of the melancholy exiles.—— Ver. 3. They that wasted us required of us mirth.—Want of sympathy with the feelings of others, is one of the commonest forms of human selfishness—of human sinfulness.

Psalm CXXXIX. Ver. 1. O Lord, thou hast searched me.—The speaker is one throughout the whole Psalm—one still with God, (ver. 18,)—one who drives far from him all "bloody men," (ver. 19), who hates them with "perfect hatred;" and who, so far from shrinking from the eye of omniscience, boldly requests to be both "searched" and "tried." Let any one read and study these characteristics, and say, Is not this the Christ?

Psalm CXLVIII. Ver. 7. Dragons.—This word is generally interpreted "sea-monsters"—an unmeaning phrase. The word is generic, and that it sometimes signifies wild beasts, seems probable from Mal. 1. 3. That it also is applied to the whale, seems certain from its description as one of the mammalia, (Lam. 4. 3.) and from its property of holding its breath and violently emitting it, Jer. 14. 6.

PROVERBS,

And the two immediately following, were penned by Solomon, the renowned king of Israel. Its Hebrew name MISCHLIM imports sentences well pressed together, and powerful to command our assent and regulate our conduct. Teaching by such proverbs, or short substantial sentences, was a very ancient, and is a very plain, profitable, and easy, method of instruction. These Proverbs of Solomon are not a mere collection of the wise sayings which had been uttered before his time, but are the inspired dictates of the Holy Ghost to him; and are often quoted or alluded to as such in other inspired books. This book comprehends (1) A preface; consisting of manifold exhortations to the study and improvement of true wisdom, and of warnings to avoid connexions or intimacy with wicked persons, whoredom, rash suretiship, sloth, &c., chap. i—ix. (2) The Proverbs themselves; published from the beginning, x—xxiv. or copied out by the direction of Hezekiah; xxv—xxix. (3) The appendix; containing the prophecy of Agur, and the directions of his mother to him; xxx, xxxi. As the book of Psalms is calculated to make our hearts warm towards God in holy and pious affections, the scope of this is to make our face shine before men in a prudent, discreet, honest, and useful conversation; which is a no less necessary part of religion. And no book in the world, in so small a compass, affords us such a complete body of rules for directing our personal and relative behaviour.

THE Proverbs of Solomon, the son of David, king of Israel;

2 To know wisdom and instruction; to perceive[a] the words of understanding;

3 To receive[b] the instruction of wisdom, justice, and judgment, and equity;

4 To give subtilty[c] to the simple, to the young man knowledge and discretion.

5 A wise man will hear,[d] and will increase learning; and a man of understanding shall attain unto wise counsels:

6 To understand a proverb, and the interpretation; the words of the wise, and their dark sayings.

7 ¶ The fear[e] of the LORD is the beginning[f] of knowledge: but fools despise wisdom and instruction.

8 My son, hear the instruction of thy father, and forsake not the law of thy mother:

9 For they shall be an ornament of grace unto thy head, and chains about thy neck.

10 ¶ My son, if sinners entice thee, consent thou not.

11 If they say, Come with us, let us lay wait for blood, let us lurk privily for the innocent[g] without cause;[h]

12 Let us swallow them up alive as the grave; and whole, as those that go down into the pit:

13 We shall find all precious substance, we shall fill our houses with spoil:

14 Cast in thy lot among us; let us all have one purse:

15 My son, walk not thou in the way with them; refrain thy foot from their path:

16 [i] For their feet run to evil, and make haste to shed blood:

17 (Surely in vain the net is spread [k] in the sight of any bird:)[l]

18 And they lay wait for their own blood; they lurk privily for their own lives.[m]

19 So are the ways of every one that is greedy of gain; which taketh away the life of the owners thereof.

20 ¶ [n] Wisdom crieth without; she uttereth her voice in the streets;

21 She crieth in the chief place of concourse, in the openings of the gates: in the city she uttereth her words, saying,

22 How long, ye simple ones,[o] will ye love simplicity? and the scorners delight in their scorning, and fools hate knowledge?

23 [p] Turn you at my reproof: behold, I [q] will pour out my Spirit[r] unto you, I will make known my words unto you.

24 ¶ Because I have called, and ye refused; I have stretched out my hand, and no man regarded;

25 But ye have set at nought all my counsel, and would none of my reproof:

26 [s] I also will laugh at your calamity; I will mock when your fear cometh.[t]

27 [u] When your fear cometh as desolation, and your destruction cometh as a whirlwind; when distress and anguish cometh upon you:

28 [v] Then shall they call upon me, but I will not answer; they shall seek me early, but they shall not find me:

29 [w] For that they hated knowledge, and did not choose the fear of the LORD:

30 [x] They would none of my counsel; they despised all my reproof:

31 Therefore shall they eat of the fruit of their own way, and be filled with their own devices.

d Right hearing is the great mark and duty of God's children. It is the great remedy against idolatry: "Hear, O Israel: The Lord our God is one Lord," Deut. 6. 4. It is the special claim of Jesus—"He that hath ears to hear, let him hear," Mat. 13. 9. It is the special claim of the Spirit: "Let him hear what the Spirit saith unto the churches," Rev. 27. It is the great principle of the spiritual life—"Hear, and your soul shall live," Is. 55. 3. It is the great channel of faith—"Faith cometh by hearing," Rom. 10. 17.—Ed.

e "Doth not perfect love cast out fear?" True, but not the fear of God. It casteth out the fear of condemnation, (Rom. 8. 1.); it triumphs over the fear of death, (1 Cor. 15. 57.); but it implants and cherishes the fear of reverence for the majesty, the holiness, and the mercy of God.—Ed.

t How can a merciful Saviour thus "laugh and mock" at the "calamity and fear" of sinners? Just because they are still impenitent sinners. EXPLANATORY NOTES.—CHAP. I. Ver. 1. The choice, divine, substantial, instructive, and governing, but sometimes darkly expressed, sentences of the incomparably wise and inspired Solomon. 2. Framed by the Spirit of God to teach men true and solid wisdom in things pertaining to God and their neighbour, to enable them to discern sin and duty, and to receive and profit by whatever good instructions or advices are given them: 3. To incline and persuade them readily to hearken to such instructions as direct them to live in a wise, candid, upright, and virtuous manner; 4. That those who are unskilful, rash, and incautious, may become circumspect, prudent, and discreet, in their conduct: 5. And those, who are wise in the matters of time and eternity, may become still more wise and prudent; and be able, with great advantage, to govern themselves and others; 6. And be capable of finding out the meaning of the wise, though dark, sayings of God or men, and profitably to apply them to themselves, or explain them to others.——7. It is necessary that every one, who desires true wisdom, should begin with, and chiefly study, the saving knowledge of God, and live under a holy awe, in the love, worship, and service of him; as, without this, all other knowledge is vain and useless; and, for want of it, wicked men, who prefer trifles to things of infinite importance, pour contempt on the wisest instructions that can be given them. 8, 9. And, next to the fear of God, it is necessary, my dear young men, that you reverence, honour, and obey your parents, and gladly receive, and earnestly practise, their instructions, as things of inestimable value, which will render you more amiable and honourable than all the gay adorning on earth. 10. And, in order to promote the fear of God, and regard to parental instructions, see, that with the utmost circumspection and earnestness, you avoid all unnecessary fellowship with wicked persons, and all hearkening to their flattering enticements. 11—15. If, in the most courteous manner, and by every argument drawn from profound secrecy, sure success, immense profit, and good fellowship, they would seduce you to robbery, or any other wickedness, abhor their counsels, and flee from their company: 16. For, being set on mischief themselves, if they once entangle you, they will perpetually hurry you from one horrid crime to another. 17. And while they lay snares for others, whom they reckon rash and inconsiderate, themselves, like silly birds, rush into courses, of which the dangerous issue might be easily perceived: 18. And, in the end, all their pains and cunning to undo others bring ruin upon themselves from the hand of God and men: 19. And all unrighteous methods of procuring wealth but issue in the destruction of the procurers.——20—33. While you shun and abhor the enticements of the wicked, listen to the voice of Jesus Christ, the wisdom of God, who, in his word and ordinances of the gospel, in the most public, affectionate, earnest, and importunate manner, calls you, however simple, ignorant, foolish, or even scornful, to forsake your wicked courses, and turn to him by faith and repentance, to receive his Spirit, freely given, and believe his words divinely manifested unto you. 24—29. But in the most solemn manner he warns you, that, if you persist in despising his gracious calls, instructions, and offers, his distinguished vengeance shall overtake and ruin you and your nation, in the most unexpected, fearful, unpitied, and remediless manner;—and that, while your most rueful cries for deliverance shall be disregarded, your own counsels and contrivances shall render you inexpressibly miserable, and your occasional escapes, and even prosperity, shall, by encouraging your folly, pride, and wickedness, prove means of hastening and aggravating your ruin; 33. While they, who hearken to his instructions, and believe on his name, shall, by his watchful providence, be marvellously protected, comforted, and eternally saved.

MY son, if thou wilt receive my words, and hide my commandments with thee;

2 So that thou incline thine ear unto wisdom, and apply thine heart to understanding;

3 Yea, if thou criest after knowledge, and liftest up thy voice for understanding;

4 If thou seekest her as silver, and searchest for her as for hid treasures;[a]

5 Then shalt thou understand the fear of the LORD, and find the knowledge of God.

6 For the LORD giveth wisdom: out of his mouth cometh knowledge and understanding.

7 He layeth up sound wisdom for the righteous: he is a buckler to them that walk uprightly.

8 He keepeth the paths of judgment, and preserveth the way of his saints.

9 Then shalt thou understand righteousness,[†] and judgment, and equity; yea, every good path.

[a] Pearls are brought up from the depths of the sea; gold is washed from the earth and sands; silver is dug from the deep and dark mine; gems are extricated from the solid rock; the relics of antiquity are separated from rubbish and ruins—and shall the unsearchable riches of Christ be expected on the surface, as the reward of the indolent, or the discovery of accident? No. The believer searches in study of the word, in study of the ways of Providence, in study of his own heart, in the depths of sovereign grace and eternal love—and discovers those treasures that lie hid from the wise and prudent, but which God by his Spirit reveals unto babes.—Ed.

Faithless to God, faithless to man—the perjured wanton is at once the original and the emblem of all that is most seductive, dangerous, and deadly. But to view the passage as a mere warning against a wicked woman, were to narrow it far within the limits of its full meaning. She is the emblem of that heathen idolatry by which the spirit is seduced from God, and immersed in sensuality; and she is the emblem of that seductive apostasy in the nominal Christian church which is called Babylon—with whom the kings of the earth have committed fornication, and whose judgment, though it linger, will come in one hour, Rev. 18. 9, 10.—Ed.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAP. I.—The inspired oracles of God are calculated to convey the most solid and precious instruction in the things both of time and eternity: and it is necessary and profitable, that all, even the wisest, should carefully search them, particularly in the days of youth, in which the faculties are most quick, the temptations most numerous, and our conversation, for time and eternity, just forming. Deep regard to God and to parental admonitions are highly necessary in those who desire true wisdom. But there can be no solid knowledge or prudence where the heart is not changed, believes not on Christ, and loves not God as in him. With amazing earnestness and craft do sinners seduce others, particularly young and simple ones, into fellowship with them in sin. It is necessary, therefore, to be always impressed with the awe of God's omniscience and just vengeance, that no temptation of secrecy or of gain may tempt us to wickedness: and to avoid the society of the wicked if we choose to escape their ruin. But with what infatuation do men, more stupid than birds, rush into danger when fairly warned! and, in ruining others, they but ruin themselves in a more miserable manner: and, however secrecy or power may protect them from men, the vengeance of God overtakes them. Their cruelty and avarice hurry them and their companions into lasting misery and wo. Alas! how great is their folly, who, for a perishing world, destroy an immortal soul; and for a momentary pleasure, plunge themselves into everlasting fire! But great is the compassion of Jesus to such rebellious sinners: in the most earnest and open manner he pleads with them, in the ordinances of his grace, to promote their eternal salvation. Condescending are his offers and invitations of mercy, pointed to the most unworthy and wicked; and precious and necessary the benefits which he offers. But inexcusable is their guilt, and dreadful their ruin, who obstinately refuse them. Rejected of God in their misery, even their ease and prosperity harden and insnare them, and aggravate their wo! But blessed above all with salvation and rest are those who receive them, and listen to his gracious voice.

CHAP. II.—Ver. 1—5. And, for your excitement and encouragement, know assuredly, my children, that, if you entertain, receive, and lay up in your heart the instructions and directions which I now give you; if you earnestly study, and importunately pray for, the enjoyment of Jesus Christ, and of all true and spiritual wisdom and knowledge in him, as infinitely more precious, useful, and desirable than all the treasures on earth, then you shall, by the influences of the Holy Spirit, happily obtain your desire, and be enabled and directed to know, obey, fear, love, worship, and serve God in a proper and truly acceptable manner. 6—9. For, as wisdom and every other blessing is the free gift of God, he in his word hath revealed, and by his Spirit bestows, it upon men, and gives them a true and spiritual knowledge of himself and his ways. He hath in store, and is always ready to bestow upon such as ask it, true, solid, and substantial wisdom. And while he instructs and directs, he, by his almighty providence, infallibly preserves from soul-ruining mischiefs such as walk in a sincere, candid, and upright manner. He guides and enables the lovers of holiness to persevere in their integrity according to the rules of his word, and preserves them from being drawn aside from it, or endangered in it. And in seeking wisdom from him, you shall come to understand his righteousness and wisdom in all his administrations, and be enabled to imitate him in everything truly holy and virtuous. 10. And if Jesus Christ, the spiritual knowledge of divine things, and the power of practical godliness, have once taken possession of your heart and captivated your affections, 11—15. These will effectually preserve you from the crafty and ruinous seduction, either of subtle men, who, having apostatized from every thing good, walk and delight in the perplexed ways of vice, and in making others as wicked as themselves, drawing them aside, and entangling them in courses directly contrary to their own true interest, safety, conscience, or reason; 16. Or of light and lewd women, unworthy to be reckoned Israelites, who set themselves, by all the arts of flattery, to decoy such as you into whoredom; 17. Perfidiously alienating their affections and persons from their own husbands, and disregarding the solemn vows made to them at marriage; 18. And who really love no one, but promote the death and eternal damnation of all such as cultivate any familiarity with them. 19. Very few, who are once insnared into their impure embraces, are ever, by the grace of God, recovered to a penitent, chaste, and virtuous life on earth, or to everlasting glory in heaven.——20—22. And, moreover, while you are preserved from the ruinous infection of these wicked seducers, you shall be enabled to follow the example of the holy patriarchs and prophets; and, in consequence of this, shall happily dwell in this promised land of Canaan, and inherit the spiritual and everlasting felicity prefigured by it.—While these wicked seducers, and their followers, shall, after a shortlived flourish of prosperity, be furiously driven from this land and earth, and cast into the flames and depths of hell.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAP. II.—With remarkable diligence should we attend to all the exercises of true religion. The Lord is ready to bless such as are diligent with great success; and usually bestows upon them remarkable instruction, satisfaction, and protection. There is need of real religion to season and rule our heart; and of God's special preservation and our utmost caution while we live in this world, where men of corrupt principles, and women of treacherous and corrupt practices, so greatly abound. In their sinful courses such are generally obstinate, active, and crafty. Insnaring are their enticements, and dangerous and ordinarily ruinous their connexions: and few, once entangled in their wickedness, ever seriously repent, or turn to Jesus Christ for life and salvation. Happy then are they who are delivered from them, and enabled to walk as truly pious and circumspect. Godliness has the promise of this life and of that which is to come. Even now the saints alone have a blessed portion on earth; and at last they only shall inhabit the new earth, into which no wicked person shall ever enter.

* Some think this description of temporal blessings is confined to the Jewish, and not literally extended to the Christian dispensation. This, with the exception of the promise of possessing Canaan, is an unfounded distinction; "for godliness is profitable unto all things, having the promise of the life that now is, 1 Tim. 4. 8. The true meaning of the verse lies in referring its promise to the gift of eternal life, and the acquisition of the "unsearchable riches of Christ."—ED.

CHAP. III.—Ver. 1, 2. Let me therefore again entreat you, my dear children, to receive, and rivet in your judgment, memory, will, and affections, the counsels and commands which I now give, that you may practise them in your lives: thus shall your temporal life be long, healthful, and prosperous; be attended with a pleasant life of grace here, and followed by an eternal life of glory hereafter. 3, 4. And while you live by a cordial, constant, and assured faith in the mercy and faithfulness of God, pledged in his word, study always, as your great honour, to imitate him in kindness, compassion, and uprightness: thus shall you be highly respected and honoured, and shall prudently order your affairs both before God and men. 5, 6. Always, by faith in his new covenant promises and relations, depend wholly on God for strength, direction, and success, in your undertakings, and never upon your own knowledge or carnal prudence. In every undertaking believe and depend on his overruling power, observe his directions, and implore and wait for his favour and blessing, and he shall guide you in all your proceedings, and bring them to a happy issue. 7, 8. Never indulge a conceit of your own knowledge or wisdom, as if it were sufficient to direct you in the easiest matters: but under the influence of a holy and filial awe of, and regard to, God, avoid with care whatever he has forbidden in his law: as that is the way to promote the health, strength, and comfort of both soul and body in time and eternity. 9, 10. In just gratitude to God, who has bestowed all that you have upon you, make conscience of employing your estates in works of piety, for the maintenance of his worship, and of charity to his poor, and of justice to all men: so shall his blessing abundantly increase them in everything useful and comfortable. 11, 12. Never overlook or contemn the afflictions which you meet with, as if they were trifles, or happened by chance; and never grow weary of them as an intolerable burden, or take any unlawful course to remove them; but kindly receive and submit to them as the corrections of a kind and gracious Father, in which he manifests his distinguished love to, and care for, your souls.——13—18. Thrice happy is the man who through much tribulation, and with much care and pains, obtains the enjoyment of Jesus Christ, and the spiritual wisdom and knowledge that is in and by him. This is infinitely preferable to everything gainful, comely, precious, or profitable on earth. By this we are secured in all the real blessings of this present life, and of that which is to come. In cleaving to Jesus, and walking in his ordinances and laws, the most delightful comforts and pleasures, the most blessed tranquillity of mind and conscience, the most happy success of affairs, and eternal rest with God in glory, are to be enjoyed.—Immortal, quickening, and invigorating, is the satisfaction enjoyed by every one who earnestly embraces his person, receives his instructions, and steadfastly walks in his ways. 19, 20. And no wonder that Jesus Christ, and the spiritual wisdom and knowledge that are hid in him, should be so profitable, pleasant, and comfortable, when by him, and in the exercise of his infinite wisdom, God formed, founded, and settled the heavens, and earth, and seas, and all that is therein, and makes the fountains to pour forth streams for the nourishment of animals, and the clouds to drop down dews and rains for the nourishment of plants, corn, and grass.——21—26. Be it therefore your earnest care to fix these my instructions in your heart, and to keep them always before your eyes, as the means of obtaining true and profitable knowledge and prudence. You will find them infallible promoters of true life, and honour, and comfort, temporal, spiritual, and eternal. By means hereof, you, by the blessing of God, shall prosper in your labours, and be kept from falling into sin or danger; and, under his protection, you shall enjoy the most safe and pleasant rest and refreshment. No reports of sudden and approaching danger, or of desolating judgments, appointed for, or effected by, the wicked, need in the least terrify you; for the Almighty JEHOVAH, in whom you have placed all your trust and confidence, shall support, protect, and preserve you from danger. 27, 28. Never delay the payment of just debts, or the giving to the Lord, or to the poor, beyond the first opportunity afforded you, as you know not if ever Providence will give you another. 29. Never contrive mischief against any: especially against such as depend on your equity and kindness. 30. Never be quarrelsome and contentious: and especially to such as have done you no injury. 31, 32. Never let the prosperity and wealth of oppressors tempt you to wish yourselves in their condition, or to imitate them in their injurious conduct; for wilful and obstinate oppressors are infinitely detested and hated of God; but his secret counsels and comforts are vouchsafed to such as walk uprightly and honestly. 33.

26 Ponder the path of thy feet, and let all thy ways be established.

27 Turn not to the right hand nor to the left; remove thy foot from evil.

Evil-doers, however great, and all that they have, are under the destructive influence of God's curse; but good men, being under the influence of his favour and blessing, may be happy in the meanest condition upon earth. 34. God will certainly at last expose proud mockers of religion and virtue to scorn and contempt; but will render such as are meek and humble highly respected and honoured. 35. And though persons truly wise unto salvation may for a time be abusively reproached and contemned, yet they shall, in the most free and fixed manner, enjoy honour from God and men at last; whereas contempt and misery are all the promotion that wicked men, ignorant of God, and regardless of their true interest, shall ever attain.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAP. III.—Real religion has a glorious and effectual tendency to render men happy in themselves, and blessings to all around them. And those who neglect and despise it are in general mean-spirited, foolish, and self-ruining wretches, dishonourers of God, and plagues to mankind. But great is the shame that the professors of religion so little conform their lives to the excellent rules thereof, that they so little exemplify them in their behaviour and conduct. And comely would the church of God appear, if that regard to God's law, faith in him, devotion, resignation to his will, diligence in his work, and that truth, mercy, equity, peacefulness, humility, and prudence, towards men, required in his word, were duly exercised.

CHAP. IV.—Ver. 1—3. My dear young friends, attend to and receive these affectionate, wholesome, and profitable instructions which I give you: and while you live, earnestly practise the same. They are the very same which I myself, as a darling son, and intended successor on the throne, received from my pious and affectionate father David. 4—9. He, in the most careful and earnest manner, instructed me in my childhood, and begged me to fix his instructions and directions in my heart, and practise them in my life, as the means of attaining true and lasting felicity. He earnestly recommended to me the getting of Jesus Christ, and the true knowledge and fear of God in him, and cleaving thereto, as the grand and effectual means of preservation from sin and danger, and of obtaining happiness and honour both in time and eternity.* 10—13. As you wish to live long and prosperously, receive, and observe in your practice, these my instructions. I do not direct you into paths of folly, fraud, or perverseness, but into a course of wisdom, integrity, and virtue; in which you may prosecute business without any entangling difficulties, and with ease, despatch, and certain success. Carefully fix these instructions in your mind and heart, and persevere in the practice of them, as on this your happiness in time and eternity depends. 14—19. With the utmost care and abhorrence avoid the company and course of wicked men, and every temptation thereto; and with the greatest speed and earnestness, flee from it if you have been entangled; for such is the malignity of their dispositions, that they can take no rest till they execute their villanous intentions, and are perpetually disturbing themselves in order to ruin others. They neither have, nor desire, any other provision to live on than what they get by unjust and violent courses. And, while good men daily grow in knowledge, grace, and holiness of conversation, till they arrive at perfection, wicked men, amidst gross ignorance, error, confusion, crimes, and wretchedness, rush on heedlessly till they are plunged into everlasting misery. 20—27. And in order to retain in heart, and practise in life, these my excellent instructions, which are a source of lasting and complete happiness to all who improve them aright, watch over your heart, and keep your mind, conscience, will, affections, thoughts, and desires, with uncommon earnestness, as from these do originally issue the eternal happiness or misery of mankind. Resolutely shun all impure or wicked discourse; and never let any corrupt, false, filthy, idle, passionate, or scornful communication proceed from your lips. Let your mind and thoughts be fixed only upon the right paths of holiness and virtue, that you may walk in them without ever turning from them; and never let your eyes, by fixing on improper objects, seduce you into sin or danger. Before you fix upon any action, carefully examine whether it be agreeable to God's law, and answerable to the end for which you intend it; and let every step you take in life be rightly ordered, according to the rule of his word. And, by shunning extremes on every hand, labour to avoid everything offensive or injurious either to God or men.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAP. IV.—It is the greatest honour, as well as duty, of parents carefully to instruct their children: and it may be infinitely useful after both instructors and instructed are laid in the dust. Unspeakably excellent is Jesus Christ, his grace, and holy religion. Multitudes of powerful reasons engage us to remember and cleave to them: and to love, delight in, or exalt them. Yet how apt are our corrupt hearts to insnare us into fellowship with wicked persons or practices, or even to render us intent on, and delighted in, the most cruel and barbarous conduct! But wide is the difference in time, and especially in eternity, between the way of holiness and that of iniquity. While the saints gradually grow up in grace here, and live in endless felicity hereafter, the wicked blindly rush forward into everlasting misery. Great circumspection, care, diligence, and watchfulness, are therefore necessary in denying ungodliness and worldly lusts, and in living soberly, righteously, and godly in this present evil world.

CHAP. V.—Ver. 1, 2. And, my children, what I am just going to say requires your particular and most serious consideration, that you may be able to preserve yourselves from the most subtle and dangerous deceits, and, by your pious and prudent discourses and admonitions, prevent the insnarement of others. 3—6. For, astonishing are the arts, and inconceivable the enchanting flatteries, of whorish women, as if nothing but the most pure and exquisite pleasures were to be enjoyed in fellowship with them: but dreadful is the real issue thereof, in the impairing of men's health, strength, estates, and reputation; and in remorse of conscience, wretched death, and endless damnation. And to prevent your repentance and escape from their snares, they will turn themselves into ten thousand forms, that they may work on your several humours. 7—14. Let me, therefore, with the utmost affection, earnestness, and solemnity, beseech you to avoid such women, and all, even the most distant, approaches to familiarity with them, as a dangerous, an infernal plague; lest you forfeit your credit, and sacrifice your vigour of life to base and cruel wretches, who labour to ruin you to every intent, and for ever; and lest your wealth, and the fruit of your care and labour, should by their means be transferred from you to others; and when your substance is gone, and your body pining to death, under horrible diseases, you should have nothing left you but inexpressible torment of conscience, reflecting upon the faithful admonitions of parents and teachers which you have contemned, and the miseries you do, and must for ever, undergo. 15—19. And to prevent your having the smallest inclination to the base and polluting pleasures of whoredom, marry; and in a wife, wholly your own, enjoy and rest contented with the pure, chaste, and honourable pleasures of the marriage state. Take pleasure in having children by her, sporting in the streets, or dispersed into families. Have children by her alone, and which you are sufficiently certain are really your own. Make your wife happy, by an affectionate cleaving to her only: and take pleasure in her innocent and delightful company. While you live together, let her always be amiable in your eyes; cherish her with the most tender affection; and in her embraces, and tender regard, always take such satisfaction as to prevent your affections in the least fixing upon another in her stead. 20, 21. And when you can so fully, pleasantly, securely, constantly, innocently, and honourably, enjoy such pleasures in a pious and affectionate wife, why risk every thing dear, to enjoy the base, dishonourable, destructive, and damning pleasures of whoredom,—especially when the all-seeing God witnesses your most secret conduct, and will quickly reward or punish you according to the nature of it? 22, 23. Nor shall whoremongers and adulterers long escape his insupportable vengeance;—their own guilt and lust shall for ever bind and hold them fast under the power of his wrath. To punish their contempt of former instructions and warnings, God shall abandon them to impenitence, and permit them madly to rush forward, through increasing crimes, into endless damnation.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAP. V.—It is shameful and shocking that mankind should be inclined, nay, so much inclined, to a sin so base, so beastly, and ruinous, as whoredom.—That, even in the sex where modesty ought to shine with distinguished lustre, wretches should be found who impudently entice to it! Surely it must be very absurd to prefer the pleasures of it, attended with miseries innumerable, to the innocent, the sanctified joys and honours of the marriage state! But no wonder that they, who atheistically discredit the omniscience and justice of God, and live thoughtless of their future account, should proceed to the most infamous lengths in wickedness. Yet let them remember, that in the most miserable manner, correspondent to their sins, they shall at last be hurried into endless fire!

CHAP. VI.—Ver. 1—5. And that no occasion may be given for family contentions or ruin, let me admonish you to beware of all rash engagements in suretiship, especially for such whose honesty or ability you know not; but, if you have rashly entangled and enslaved yourself by such obligations, endeavour, as quickly as possible, by every humble and persuasive method you can think of; nay, struggle as for life, to disengage yourself, by pressing the debtor to pay what he owes, or the creditor to acquit you of your bond.——6—11. Meanwhile, never indulge yourself in sloth, and want of provident care; but learn, from those puny insects the ants, to labour diligently in your calling, and carefully improve every opportunity of honestly providing for yourself and your family: and remember that, if that inclination to idleness and sloth, so common to mankind, be indulged by you, whether in greater or smaller degrees, unexpected, and at last extreme poverty shall irresistibly come upon you.——12—15. Remember too, that it is the property of persons vile and wicked to accustom themselves to profane, blasphemous, proud, passionate, lewd, or reproachful discourse, or by signs made with their eyes, feet, or fingers, to stir up others to mischief. The heart of such being filled with perverse inclinations, they are perpetually contriving mischief, and stirring up hatred and contention among their neighbours: but suddenly shall their villany and wickedness issue in their irretrievable infamy and ruin. 16—19. And indeed proud looks, lying tongues, murderous hands, hearts given to mischievous contrivances, feet given to a speedy execution of injurious designs, perjured persons, and sowers of discord among friends or neighbours, are distinguished objects of God's indignation.——20—22. Let me therefore again press you to attend to, highly esteem, and carefully practise, those divine instructions which have been tendered to you by your parents. This will be of great use to direct, preserve, and comfort you in your whole labours of life. 23, 24. For the law of God, as a lamp, guides in adversity, and, as the light of the sun, directs and comforts in prosperity; and the reproofs of his word are excellent means of preserving from ruin, and leading to true happiness; and are particularly useful to preserve from being deluded by the flattering speeches and enticements of lewd women, those sinks of wickedness and plagues of mankind. 25—29. As you regard your temporal or eternal welfare, never gaze on the beauty or fine attire of such: never let their wanton and enticing looks engage you to the most distant desire after their dangerous embraces; for if once they insnare you, they will never quit their hold till they have reduced you to extreme beggary, or to a miserable and ignominious death. You may more safely take fire into your bosom, or walk upon burning coals, than intermeddle, however privately or transiently, with a whorish woman, particularly if either party be married. 30—33. If one merely steal to fill his hungry belly, he is not exposed to shame or punishment; and if it be found that he has stolen more, it is only required that he should make complete restitution according to the law, which may perhaps amount to all that he is worth. But he who commits adultery with a woman can have no necessity for it, but acts through mere folly and wickedness, and so exposes himself to the loss of his life by the magistrates, as well as to eternal damnation from the hand of God. He exposes himself to bloody quarrels, and renders himself irrecoverably infamous. And though the civil magistrate should wickedly spare his life, yet it is exposed to the fury of a justly enraged husband, who will regard no penitential submissions or entreaties, and accept no gifts as the ransom of it.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAP. VI.—Greatly advantageous, even to the outward interests of persons, families, and nations, is an exact obedience to God's commandments. And it is sinful and foolish to ruin our estates or families by engaging for other people's debts: but infamously wicked are those debtors who exert not themselves to the utmost to relieve their sureties. Great care ought to be taken of our outward property. In respect of it we are but God's stewards, and ought to lay it out and bring it in according to his directions. The amazing instinct which God hath given to some animals, and their conduct, shame the slothful of mankind. Such sluggards are very averse to be roused to their work, spiritual or temporal. If one degree of indolence be denied them, they would gradually enjoy a lesser: but poverty in a quick, irresistible, and ruinous manner, comes to such at last. With alarming earnestness do sinners practise iniquity, and make every power of their soul, or member of their body, instrumental therein. And many things in heart, in lip, in life, are detested by God, which are overlooked as almost innocent by men. With what ardent love ought we to regard the word of God as our enlightening instructor and regulating law! It is necessary to receive, retain, and improve it as a powerful mean to preserve us from fleshly lusts, which war against both body and soul. But terrible and fatal snares are the flattering words and looks of whorish and light women. It is impossible to avoid destruction if once we are entangled by them. And it is shocking that so many indulge themselves in a crime so infamous and destructive.

CHAPTER VII.

(1) Intimacy with wisdom, a preservative against temptation: 1—5. (2) A sad example of an abandoned tempter and a simple compliant victim: 6—23. (3) An exhortation and warning founded on these examples: 24—27.

A. M. cir. 3029. B. C. cir. 975.

MY son,* keep my words, and lay up my commandments with thee.

2 Keep my commandments, and live; and my law as the apple of thine eye.

3 Bind them upon thy fingers, write them upon the table of thine heart.

4 Say unto wisdom, Thou art my sister; and call understanding thy kinswoman:

5 That they may keep thee from the strange woman, from the stranger which flattereth with her words.

6 ¶ †For at the window of my house‡ I looked through my casement,

7 And beheld among the simple ones, I discerned among the youths, a young man void of understanding,

8 Passing through the street near her corner; and he went the way to her house,

9 In the twilight, ‖ in the evening, in the black and dark night:

10 And, behold, there met him a woman with the attire of an harlot,* and subtile of heart.

11 (She is loud and stubborn; her feet abide not in her house:

12 Now is she without, now in the streets, and lieth in wait at every corner.)

13 So she caught him, and kissed him, and [a] with an impudent face said unto him,

14 I have peace-offerings† with me; this day have I paid my vows:

15 Therefore came I forth to meet thee, diligently to seek thy face, and I have found thee.

16 I have decked my bed with coverings of tapestry, with carved works, with fine linen of Egypt.

17 I have perfumed my bed with myrrh, aloes, and cinnamon.

18 Come, let us take our fill of love* until the morning; let us solace ourselves with loves.

19 For the †goodman is not at home, he is gone a long journey:

20 He hath taken a bag of money ‡with him, and will come home at §the day appointed.

21 [b] With her much fair speech she caused him to yield, with the flattering of her lips she forced him.

22 He goeth after her [c] straightway, as an ox goeth to the slaughter, or as a fool to the correction of the stocks;‖

23 [d] Till a dart strike through his liver; as a bird hasteth to the snare, and knoweth not that it is for his life.

24 ¶ [e] Hearken unto me now therefore, O ye children, and attend to the words of my mouth:

25 [f] Let not thine heart decline to her ways, go not astray in her paths:

26 For she hath cast down many wounded; yea, many strong men have been slain by her.

27 [g] Her house is the way to hell, going down to the chambers of death.

* My son.—The speaker is either God as the heavenly Father, or an earthly father, inspired by his Spirit, and speaking by his authority. That God himself is the speaker, seems warranted by the familiar reference to "my commandments," "my law," and the unqualified promises of life in keeping them—statements and promises far beyond the dignity and power of any earthly parent, and which God alone is able to make and realize.—Ed.

† What follows appears to have been a fact observed by Solomon.

And here, by a perverse interpretation, the beneficence of religion is made a cloak and incentive to sin. —Note. And let every Christian note it well: to turn the grace of God into licentiousness is a constant inclination in man, and a constant temptation of Satan. Let believers watch and pray that they follow neither.—Ed.

* It is thus that by the misapplication of words, the world, the flesh, and the devil, continue to seduce and destroy. Love is an attribute, a name for God himself; yet, under this name, the seducer covers her own perjury, her victim's lewdness, and the disregard and enmity of both to God.—Ed.

CHAPTER VIII.

The call, the excellency, the power, the works, and distributive blessedness of the ETERNAL WISDOM.

DOTH not wisdom cry? and understanding put forth her voice?

2 She standeth in the top of high places, by the way in the places of the paths:

3 She crieth at the gates, at the entry of the city, at the coming in at the doors:

4 [a] Unto you, O men, I call; and my voice is to the sons of man.

5 O ye simple,* understand wisdom; and, ye fools, be ye of an understanding heart.

CHAP. VII.—Ver. 1—5. My dear young friends, let me again press upon your consciences to lay up my advices and instructions in your judgment, heart, and memory; and carefully, tenderly, and readily to observe and practise them. Make yourselves familiar with Jesus Christ, and his spiritual instructions, as the most powerful means of preservation from the ensnaring arts and flatteries of whorish women, which is a privilege of infinite importance. 6—9. For, from my own window I observed a thoughtless young fop sauntering under night in the streets, and in a stately manner walking towards a corner which these infamous strumpets used to haunt. 10—20. There, one dressed in a light and whorish manner, and extremely skilled in the arts of enticement,—one extremely talkative, ready to brawl with her husband, given to idle visiting, and gadding about to places of dissipation and concourse,—met him, caught him in her arms and kissed him, and in an impudent manner told him, that, being a devout lady, she had that very day been offering thank-offerings to God; and being to feast upon her share of the flesh thereof, she had solicitously sought him to take a part of it, and had happily found him;—and that she had decked and perfumed her bed in the most engaging manner,—in which they might riot all night in exquisite pleasures, without any danger, as the silly fellow called her husband was gone a long journey, had a great deal of business to transact, and would not return till the full moon. 21—23. Notwithstanding his showing some aversion at first, she, by her fair pretences and flattering speeches, quickly compelled him to follow her, as willingly, and no less stupidly, than an ox goeth to the slaughter, or a madman to the stocks,—never thinking of anything but pleasure, till the enraged husband sheath his sword in his bowels, or the judgments of God accomplish his irretrievable ruin!——24—27. Let me therefore beseech you, my dear young men, whom I unfeignedly regard, diligently to observe and practise these warnings which I have repeatedly given you. Never indulge the smallest inclination towards such women; never listen to their enticements; never indulge the smallest fellowship or familiarity with such; never hope to be safe in, or to return from, such courses; for many, even of those noted in valour and wisdom, have been totally ruined in reputation, estate, body, and soul, by such women; and fellowship with them is the certain road to a miserable death, and eternal damnation.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAP. VII.—It is necessary to love, search, and meditate on God's law day and night; and to make it the constant food of our heart, and standard of our life. Then should we find therein the most sanctifying virtue. Magistrates and ministers should carefully inspect the people committed to their charge! And there is need of frequent and fervent prayers to God for our friends and neighbours, as we know not in what guilt fearful temptations may involve them, if not overcome. The devil quickly finds business for idle and unseasonable saunterers, especially if young. And, when women are once addicted to flaunting, loose, and gaudy apparel, and to wheedling in love matters, and are extremely talkative, and given to an unsettled and dissipated course, it will require no great pains to make harlots of them. Terribly base and impudent these women become, who have thrown off the restraints of modesty peculiar to their sex. And sad is the case when husbands and wives are glad to be rid of one another's company. It is shameful, wicked, and ruinous, when Satan, and his abominable agents or lusts, are, in days of youth, preferred to Jesus Christ and his grace. But fearful and speedy destruction, from the crime itself, or from the hand of God or man, awaits the whorish adulterer. Surely then we should be solicitous to improve the falls and miseries of others, as a warning for us to take heed, lest, in the same thoughtless and inconsiderate manner, we hurry ourselves into everlasting ruin.

CHAP. VIII.—Ver. 1—11. And why, to your ruin, should you listen to the flattering enticements of whorish women, when Jesus Christ, the wisdom of God, by himself and his messengers, in the most open and earnest manner, calls you, and every one of mankind, even the most simple and foolish, to the study of true and spiritual wisdom;—to listen to, consider, and believe the excellent, pure, holy, substantial, faithful, precious, and infinitely useful oracles of his word: 12—31.

CHAPTER IX

(1) The discipline and instruction of the ETERNAL WISDOM: 1—12. (2) The temptations and ruin of (atheism) folly: 13—18.

A. M. cir. 3028. B. C. cir. 975.

WISDOM hath builded her house, she hath hewn out her seven* pillars;

2 She hath killed [a] her beasts; she hath mingled her wine; she hath also furnished her table;

3 She hath sent forth her maidens: she crieth upon the highest places of the city,

4 Whoso is simple,[†] let him turn in hither: as for him that wanteth understanding, she saith to him.

* Six pillars indicate the six days of the week; by the labour of which, all human institutions are supported, whether secular or spiritual. Seven is used to indicate that all temporal labour should be closed by a hallowed dedication of time and person, and all subordinates to God; and which then he blesses with the precious gift of rest.—ED.

† See note on chap. 8. 5.—ED.

And in order to enforce his call, and recommend his instructions, represents himself as the infinitely wise God, the source of all wisdom and prudence; the infinitely Holy One, who detests everything proud, polluted, or perverse;—and the Almighty God, able to execute all his purposes, and by whose deputed authority all the magistrates on earth govern their subjects;—the infinite lover, and rich rewarder, of all that seek him, particularly in youth;—the inexhaustible portion, and unerring guide, of all those who receive him by faith:—the eternal and only begotten Son of JEHOVAH, appointed to be our Mediator;—the almighty Maker of all things in heaven and earth;—and who, from his infinite and peculiar love to mankind, took a distinguished pleasure in forming the earth as a theatre, whereon he should appear, save, and hold intimate fellowship with the sons and daughters of Adam. 32—36. On account of all which excellencies and kindness, he, in the most earnest and condescending manner, entreats and charges you to hear, receive, and practically observe, his instructions, attend his ordinances, and receive himself in them, as the free gift of God, and as the only mean of true and everlasting happiness;—and warns you, that if you refuse and hate him, you will infallibly and eternally ruin yourselves.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAP. VIII.—How public, earnest, and extensive are the calls of the gospel! Infinitely excellent is that Jesus Christ and his salvation therein exhibited and offered, and that religion which is therein prescribed. And happy, in the blessings of time and eternity, are those persons, families, and nations, in which the knowledge of Christ and his truths prevail and reign! They are enriched with the fruits of his mediation, and filled with all the fulness of God. But is it not infinitely amazing, that God's eternal Son, the Creator and Preserver of all things, should have, from everlasting, entered into the room of, and fixed his thoughts, his delights, upon the children of men? Surely then he deserves our strictest attention, our earliest and strongest affection. And just and righteous is the sorest punishment which can be inflicted upon those self-ruiners, who refuse him, and neglect and despise the ordinances of his grace. Let me consider this great Apostle and High Priest of my profession, this great ALL and IN ALL. Let my heart seek him early, earnestly, and above all things else. Let me love him, who first loved me, with my whole heart, soul, mind, and strength. Let me rejoice and delight in him as my exceeding joy, and all my consolation. Let me carefully attend his ordinances, watching daily at his gates at the posts of his doors; and if I find him who is the great God my Saviour, and the eternal life, my pains will be infinitely more than rewarded.

CHAP. IX.—Ver. 1—5. And why enter the ruinous house, or covet the insnaring entertainment, of a harlot, when the infinitely wise Jesus Christ, who is made of God unto us wisdom, hath framed, for his fellowship with men, a glorious church on earth and in heaven, fully supported by divine perfections, purposes, oracles, and offices; and hath prepared his own crucified self, his word, ordinances, and eternal felicities, for the nourishment and satisfaction of sinful men; and in the gospel, by his faithful prophets, apostles, and ministers, earnestly invites and beseeches even the most weak, wicked, and besotted sinners of mankind to come by faith, and freely partake of his nourishing, strengthening, delightful, and satisfactory fulness and blessings? 6—12. Earnestly he admonishes you to avoid all unnecessary intimacy with wicked persons, as you regard your temporal or eternal happiness; as by it you cannot, even in attempting their reformation, justly expect to profit them, but may be sure of procuring hatred and infamy to yourselves;—and to cultivate familiarity with wise and serious persons, whom you may both profit and be profited by;—and to study true and experimental godliness, as the proper mean to render you truly happy in this world, and in that which is to come; and solemnly warns you that you yourselves must reap the inexpressibly important fruits of your attention to, or scornful rejection of, his instructions.——13—18. And remember, as before God, that nothing more effectually renders men despisers of Christ and his blessings than fellowship with light and lewd women, or false teachers; who, ignorant of everything spiritually good, and extremely talkative, artfully and impudently seduce simple persons, who intend no such thing, to imagine that forbidden pleasures are peculiarly delightful. And, alas! few of those tempted by them seriously consider, that by such pleasures multitudes have already lost their lives, and are entered into the everlasting torments of hell.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAP. IX.—What great things Jesus Christ has done, and still does, for our salvation! O how unwilling is he that we should perish! Gloriously formed, and well supported and established, are his covenant and church. Rich are his gospel provisions—his own flesh and blood, nay, all the fulness of God. And free and unincumbered with legal qualifications are his gospel calls. How absurd, insolent, and foolish, are the scornful refusers thereof! For certain and just is their aggravated and everlasting ruin. And it is impossible to have fellowship with Christ, in grace or glory, and yet live in intimacy with wicked men. There is need of the utmost care, both in giving and taking reproofs. Fidelity in reproofs is the surest evidence of genuine friendship. None are too wise to learn, nor too good to amend. And they who rage at rebuke prove the weakness of their own understanding, as well as the want of grace. But, alas! what manifold temptations, suited to the taste of our corrupt hearts, are presented to us by Satan and his emissaries, to keep or draw us from Jesus Christ! And too many, through ignorance of, and inattention to, the danger, comply therewith. But however sweet the pleasures of sin be in the mouth, they are bitter in the belly; they issue in endless torment and anguish.

CHAP. X.—Ver. 1. It is a great comfort to parents to see their children profiting by their instructions and examples, and growing up in wisdom, piety, and virtue. But it is a grief and burden to them when they are foolish, stubborn, and profligate. 2. Ill-gotten riches afford no solid comfort in life, but draw on a wasting or poisoning curse: but Jesus' righteousness imputed, and a holy, just, and merciful conduct, procure safety and deliverance from the greatest dangers. 3. The Lord, who has all fulness in his hand, will always grant necessary supplies, for both soul and body, to them who are justified in Christ, and live in a just and merciful manner. But he will deprive the wicked of their ill-gotten possessions by some stroke of his providence, or remove them from it by death. 4. Negligence and sloth, and even fraudulent methods of gain, bring men to poverty; but active diligence tends to enrich men both in temporals and spirituals. 5. To seize upon, and improve, opportunities of obtaining spiritual or temporal things, particularly in the time of youth, is a mark of true wisdom: but he that slothfully neglects them, brings misery and shame upon himself and his parents. 6. The justified in Christ are, to their everlasting honour and safety, blessed in him with all the blessings of time and eternity: and outward blessings often attend the just and merciful on earth. But their own iniquity shall violently overwhelm and confound those who wickedly defraud and oppress their neighbours. 7. The pious and virtuous shall, at least after death, be remembered with honour and praise, men blessing God for their good example and useful conversation; but wicked livers shall either be forgotten or remembered with abhorrence. 8. They who are truly wise will thankfully receive and practise laws from God, or good advices from men: but self-conceited persons, who will not learn of others, but love to hear themselves talk, shall bring themselves into contempt, sin, and misery: nay, into hell. 9. He, who in dealing with God and men, walks in candour, simplicity, and godly sincerity, is safe under the divine protection in his way to eternal life, and avoids manifold miseries and snares in this world; but he who indulges himself in hypocrisy towards God, and in inconstancy and deceit towards men, shall be detected and made a public reproach. 10. He who under pretence of kindness betrays his neighbour, and by signs mocks him, or tempts others to injure him, is a common grievance, and shall at last become miserable; but a noisy and perpetual talker ruins himself by his words, and deserves to be beaten for his impertinence. 11. mischievous language; or, if their language be fair, it but conceals the mischief which they intend to effect when opportunity serves. 12. Where there is hatred in the heart, almost everything, however innocent, will be used to raise quarrels or disturbances: but love overlooks affronts and injuries, pacifies the mind of the injured, and composes contentions for which too much ground had been given. 13. Where wisdom abounds in the heart, the discourse of the lips will be sensible and edifying; but nothing but sore afflictions here, or the torments of hell hereafter, can bring obstinate fools to any serious reflection. 14. They who know the value of true wisdom labour to enlarge their knowledge, and to keep it up till they have proper opportunities for using it: but fools rashly blab out what tends to their own or others' ruin. 15. Riches make men confident and secure, and even protect them against manifold injuries in this world; whereas poverty depresses men's spirits, and exposes them to injury and abuse. 16. The industry of the righteous in outward things issues in the comfortable maintenance of himself and others; and his care for his soul issues in life spiritual and eternal: but whatever a wicked man has by inheritance, or by his own acquirement, hardens him in sin, and is abused to gratify his sinful lusts. 17. He is in the way to eternal life, who receives, lays up in his heart, and practises the instructions of God's word, and readily regards advices, and even reproofs, given him by others: but he, who neglects to give reproof, encourages men in their mistakes; and he, who refuses to take and improve instructions and reproofs, obstinately rushes upon his own destruction. 18. He who conceals his hatred by great professions of friendship before one's face, and he who artfully vents slander behind one's back, is, with all his cunning, an impious fool in God's reckoning, and his wickedness shall be publicly exposed. 19. Even in much speaking there are ordinarily to be found words idle or wicked. It is therefore prudent to be sparing in our words, and to consider well, both when, and where, and what, and how, we speak. 20, 21. Prudent and pious discourse is pure and substantial: it edifies, instructs, and nourishes the hearers: but the heart of the wicked, being only evil, and that continually, is deceitful above all things, and desperately wicked; nothing good can proceed from it; but they persist and perish in the devices of their own foolishness, neither knowing, nor caring to know, the way of life and peace. 22. It is not men's anxious labour and care that make them rich, either in temporal or spiritual things; but the blessing of God upon their lawful endeavours confers riches, and enables to enjoy them comfortably, without pressure of guilt, tormenting fear, or perplexing care. 23. Senseless sinners take pleasure in, and make a jest of, the most horrid impieties they can commit: but they that are wise carefully avoid mischief, and all sporting with it, or delighting in it. 24. The miseries which wicked men fear, under the awakenings of conscience, shall come upon them; and whatever blessings the righteous desire and pray for, shall be granted them in due season. 25. However the wicked may bluster for a while, and threaten to overthrow every thing that stands in their way, they quickly and terribly ruin themselves, and rush into misery: but the righteous, being built on Christ the Rock of ages, and fixed in piety and virtue, stand fast for ever. No storm can shake their confidence, or deprive them of their durable and immoveable felicity. 26. As vinegar sets the teeth on edge, and smoke is vexatious to the eyes, so sluggish, negligent, and dilatory persons, vex and provoke them who send or employ them in any important business. 27. A religious observance of God's laws, and preserving of our body in temperance, soberness, and chastity, tends to prolong our life: but wickedness of itself, and by God's righteous judgments on account of it, brings on diseases, and hastens the sinner to his grave and to hell. 28. The hope of the godly, founded on Jesus' promise and blood, brings delight and satisfaction to the soul, and issues in everlasting felicity; but the hope of the wicked shall issue in disappointment and eternal misery. 29. Upright walking in Christ, and the exercising of piety and virtue, increase a person's strength for duty and courage in it: but the workers of iniquity shall be plagued with terrors, and overwhelmed in misery. 30. Nothing so establishes persons or families, in a relation to Christ, as their righteousness, and a course of piety, justice, and mercy: but the wicked, however successful they may be for a time, shall never be able to fix themselves in their prosperity, but be rooted out from the enjoyment of it. 31. The godly, out of the good treasure of their heart, bring forth good discourse, which tends to make the hearers wise unto salvation: but he that uses his tongue to abuse, cozen, or raise dissension, or to blaspheme God, and spread error, shall, in the end, have it silenced in hell. 32. The righteous know, and accustom themselves to speak, things truly useful and edifying; but the wicked abandon their lips to falsehood, flattery, fraud, and calumny, or such like subtle but detestable arts of doing mischief.

CHAP. XI.—Ver. 1. All manner of injustice and fraud is extremely hateful and detestable to God, the Governor of the world: but strict equity, in the whole of our commerce one with another, is highly pleasing to him. 2. Haughty conceit of ourselves, and insulting of others, draws along with it the utmost contempt and disgrace; both God and men take pleasure to mortify and expose the proud; but such as, having learned of Christ, live under a deep sense of their own weakness and unworthiness, find favour with men and acceptance with God. 3. When men sincerely practise what God has revealed to them, they may expect his Spirit to direct them in their duty and to their eternal felicity: but the obstinate adherence of sinners to their own lusts and imaginations, and their opposition to Christ and his laws, shall hurry them into certain and everlasting destruction. 4. Riches, heaped up by extortion or covetousness, are of no avail to deliver us from the wrath of God, or even the rage of men, when the time of punishment is come: but righteousness hath a promise of life annexed to it; it prevents those sins which would

* Who soweth the seed of the word which reveals and commends the righteousness of God, which is by faith of Jesus Christ.—ED.

† This verse is generally interpreted of the confederacies of wicked men, ratified by hand joining in hand, as a manner of swearing. The interpretation of the judicious Brown Patterson, "from hand to hand" from one generation to another, seems greatly preferable, as in strict conformity with the following clause.—ED.

‡ Personal beauty is one of the gifts of God, and, like all his other gifts, may be employed for his glory and the good of the creature upon whom it is bestowed. But, to this end, it must be guided by discretion—a judgment formed in the light of divine truth on the origin, and fading nature of the gift, and the accountability of the possessor for its use or abuse. Without this discretion, it is but like a costly ornament bestowed upon the swine, which degrades it by its unclean propensities—and "returns, even from being washed, to its wallowing in the mire."—ED.

§ He that refuses to sell food, till it rises, through scarcity, beyond the average of a just remunerating price, such as he would be willing to obtain for other merchandise.—ED.

‖ This proverb is mainly directed to those who can govern their tongue and temper in public, but who lay aside this restraint, and forget "the law of kindness" in their own houses. They shall inherit the wind—calms uncertain, and the storms destructive.—ED.

expose us to God's judgments or man's punishments; it secures against the sting of temporal, and prevents eternal death. 5, 6. Being made righteous in Christ, and sanctified by his grace, and studying a sincere and impartial observance of God's laws, are effectual means to secure direction in duty and deliverance from evil; but the wicked shall perish by those very impious and evil courses by which they hoped to secure or exalt themselves. 7. In death wicked men find all their projects and hopes utterly destroyed. Whatever they thought to accomplish, by their riches, their power, or their friends, perishes together with them, while they themselves launch forth into eternal misery. 8. The righteous are frequently in an unexpected manner delivered from their perplexing troubles; and the wicked, who perhaps brought them into them, are plunged into those very miseries themselves. 9. By flatteries, false doctrines, and artful seductions, hypocrites draw their neighbours into sin, and thereby into ruin. But through knowledge of Christ and his word shall the righteous be guarded against their wiles, and preserved from the destruction which they intended. 10. It is matter of general gladness when wise and godly men prosper, and are advanced, because they use their power and wealth for the benefit of all around them; and great is the joy, when wicked men, who, as plagues and curses where they dwell, corrupt their manners, and draw down the wrath of God upon them, are cut off. 11. By God's blessing upon the upright, and by their prayers, advices, and kindness, all around them are profited: but the wicked, by their blasphemies, errors, evil counsels, and maxims, corrupt men's manners, and ruin their welfare. 12. It is common for self-conceited fools to despise their neighbours, to reproach them as weak, or to render them ridiculous; but a prudent man, whatever he thinks, avoids speaking to the reproach of others; as, beside the wickedness of contemning others, none is so mean as to be insensible of it, or incapable of finding means of resentment. 13. They, who make a trade of carrying tales from one to another, never stick at treacherously discovering the secrets which have been intrusted to them; but a faithful friend conceals, not only what has been intrusted to him, but everything else that could tend to his neighbour's prejudice. 14. Where prudent counsel is wanting, nations and private affairs go to wreck: but where many wise counsellors unite in their deliberations, every precaution will be taken, every danger prevented, and the most proper methods used, to ensure success. 15. He, who stands bound for the debts of another man, especially one whose ability and honesty are unknown to him, is in great danger to be ruined in his estate: and the way to be secure in that point is to avoid and hate all such engagements. 16. Remarkable and increasing grace and virtue in a woman will engage affection and respect, when all other accomplishments fade and decline; and strong men hold fast the wealth which they have acquired. 17. He, who is kind and bountiful to others, secures to himself a gracious reward from God: but he, who is covetous, hard-hearted, and cruel, brings trouble on himself and his relations. 18. Whatever wicked men do to render themselves rich, easy, or honoured, will disappoint their expectation, but they, who exercise themselves in true piety and virtue, shall infallibly obtain the blessed reward of their works in time and eternity. 19. As holiness and virtue promote true happiness here and hereafter, so, the more eagerly a man pursues an evil course, the more is he bent upon his own destruction. 20. Hypocrites, who live in enmity and opposition to God and his law, while they pretend much piety, kindness, equity, and candour, are of all men the most odious to him: but they who, being renewed by his grace, walk before him in truth, equity, simplicity, and godly sincerity, are, and shall for ever be, the objects of his special favour and delight. 21. Though wicked men should do their utmost attempt to strengthen themselves by leagues and associates, they shall never be capable of protecting themselves from the just punishment of their sin: but the righteous, and often their children, for their sakes, though deserted of all men, shall be delivered by God himself from everything ruinous. 22. As a golden jewel is very ill placed in the snout of a swine, which is still routing in mires and dunghills; so beauty is ill bestowed upon a woman, who, void of good sense, modesty, and virtue, loves to employ herself in perpetual talkativeness, and wallow in filthy lusts and whorish pleasures. 23. The righteous habitually desire, and shall obtain, solid and substantial blessings to themselves and others; but wicked men wish for mischief on others, and hope to execute their wrath and malice upon them; which in the end will only bring more fearful and lasting ruin upon themselves. 24, 25. They, who, from a right principle, are remarkably liberal to the poor and to pious institutions, shall find their stock proportionably increased for their real advantage; and while they refresh and support others with their bounty, God shall reward them with prosperity of soul, in grace or comfort, or even with the enjoyments of this present world: but the pinching hand of avarice prevents enjoyment, or brings down the curse of God upon our substance. 26. He who, in a time of scarcity, hoards up corn, to raise the price, shall be hated and cursed by mankind: but good wishes and commendations from men, and blessings from God, shall attend him who then opens his granaries, and sells it at a moderate price. 27. He who earnestly sets himself to contrive and do good to others, shall obtain favour with God and men: but he who makes mischief his business shall draw upon himself the evil which he designs against his neighbour. 28. He that anxiously grasps for, and trusts in, riches, as his surest support and defence, shall find them a broken reed, to pierce him through with many sorrows, and shall fall to decay as a withered leaf: but the righteous, who are united to Christ by faith, and walk in all holy and just conversation, shall receive, out of his fulness, abundant supplies of quickening and fructifying grace, and shall thrive and prosper in their concerns. 29. He, who by his passion, prodigality, covetousness, and ambition, troubles his family, may for a time make a great bustle and stir, but it will issue in disappointment, disgrace, and poverty; and the fool, who knows not how to manage, and who lives without thought, shall be reduced to want, and forced to serve, if not sell himself, to a wiser neighbour. 30. A good man's graces, prayers, instructions, and examples, are a mean of quickening, comfort, and prosperity, to others around: and he that, by instruction, prayer, or the like, draws men from Satan to the knowledge, faith, and obedience, of Christ, shows forth true and heavenly wisdom. 31. If God will not pass his own favourites, without proper correction for their sins in this world, who can justly expect that the obstinate and contemptuous breakers of his law shall escape the just punishment of their many crimes?

CHAP. XII.—Ver. 1. He who loves reproofs, advices, and instructions, will become wise and intelligent; but he who declines, hates, and is enraged at rebukes for his faults, is under the power of his brutish passions; and there is little hope that he will ever know or act like a man. 2. The man who, being united to Christ, is clothed with his righteousness, and sanctified by his grace, and deals kindly and bountifully with others, shall be more and more favoured and blessed of God; but he, whose thoughts are bent on wickedness, shall be condemned to suffer the just punishment of his iniquity. 3. No man, however subtle or powerful, shall be able to establish his own or his family's greatness by wicked methods: but the righteous, being rooted and grounded in the Rock Christ, though shaken by manifold storms of trouble, shall remain unmovable in a flourishing state. 4. A pious, prudent, active, chaste, and affectionate wife, is a singular ornament and honour to her husband: but one that is graceless, lazy, foolish, prodigal, peevish, boisterous, and wanton, shames him when abroad, and torments him at home; and, like an incurable disease, vexes his heart, hastens him to his grave, wastes his substance, and ruins his family. 5. The thoughts and designs of good men are managed with piety, equity, candour, and truth; but the contrivances of the wicked are carried on with fraud, dissimulation, and falsehood. 6. Wicked men, by their consultations with one another, and by their reproach and perjury, study to undo their opposers; but they who are sincerely good, will labour, by their advice, testimony, recommendation, or request, to deliver such innocent persons from their snares. God himself not only defeats the ruinous projects of the wicked, but totally destroys and extirpates them and their families; whereas he continues, and establishes the persons, properties, and families of the just. 8. Not earthly science, honour, or riches, but spiritual wisdom, and a prudent management of his affairs, by fair and honest means, will render a man highly and lastingly honoured, and commended of God and of all good men: but he who indulges his obstinate corruptions, hates and opposes his duty, and labours, by wicked means, to accomplish his ends, shall bring himself into present and everlasting contempt. 9. Far happier is he, who, making no pompous show in the world, lives within the bounds of his income, though it should hardly afford him a single servant, than he who shows away with a great deal of elegance, equipage, and attendants, when he can hardly get necessary subsistence, without running into debt, or some other shameful and miserable shift. 10. Good men have implanted in their hearts a tender concern for the welfare and life of the brute animals, much more for that of their servants and neighbours: but the nature of the wicked is so cruel, that the very kindnesses which they affect to show are maliciously designed and ruinous. 11. Diligent industry in lawful callings shall, through the blessing of God, afford men a competent portion of temporal things; but idleness and bad company mark a man foolish, and lead him into desperate, impoverishing, and ruinous courses. 12. Wicked men desire, approve, and practise deceitful arts for ruining others, and wish to be secure in so doing: but the piety and justice from which righteous men's actions proceed, bring forth glory to God, maintenance and blessings to themselves, and much benefit and advantage to others around. 13. Wicked men are often brought into trouble by their own rash speeches, treasons, perjuries, lies, and calumnies: but the righteous, by the providence of God, and even by their prudent discourse, avoid and escape from many difficulties, in which otherwise they had been entangled. 14. A man shall receive abundant blessings from God, as the reward of that good which he has done by his pious and profitable discourses or works. 15. Fools are so self-conceited, that they consult nobody, but hold right whatever they think or do themselves: but wise men, distrusting their own judgment and abilities, wisely ask and take advice or instruction of others. 16. Fools, having no command of their passions, are no sooner provoked, than rage and fury appear in their countenance, words, and actions; but prudent persons conceal that displeasure which would tend to their disgrace, and overlook the shameful provocation given them, rather than dishonour themselves by resenting it. 17. He who, especially when called to be a witness, boldly and freely speaks the truth, and nothing else, shows himself an honest man, and does justice to his neighbours: but he who conceals truth, forges lies, or attests falsehoods, shows himself a deceitful and mischievous villain. 18. Some, by false accusations, calumnies, and bitter reproaches, wound the reputations, spirits, or estates of their neighbours, and make discords and divisions among them: but good men, by their prudent speeches, will labour to heal men's reputations, compose their disputes, and comfort and edify their souls. 19. Constant adherence to strict truth in his speeches, establishes a man's credit; and what he says can never be disproved; but a liar, though he may be at first believed, is soon after found out and confuted; and he is moreover apt to contradict himself, and blast his reputation for ever. 20. They who plot mischief, shall, to their great vexation, be disappointed in their expectations, and even fall into that evil which they intended for others; but they, who by their counsels

† He has no enjoyment.—Ed.

‡ A man may, in the natural sense, "make himself poor," as, in educating and providing for his family, and thereby he is made truly rich. He may also make himself comparatively poor by deeds of beneficence, and be in the sight of God, "rich in good works," (1 Tim. 6. 18.) But, in the spiritual sense, the passage is most completely verified; for the man that, by grace, "maketh himself poor in spirit," is, in return, enriched with possession of the kingdom of heaven." Mat. 5. 2.—Ed.

§ The poor in the world, and the poor in spirit, are like some humble plant, in a valley far below the storms of the higher regions: they hear them not. The one might be happy, if he valued the peace of his station; the other is really so, for he enjoys the peace of God.—Ed.

labour to promote the piety, peace, and happiness of others, shall have lasting joy and comfort for their reward. 21. Let the wicked plot as they will, nothing shall befall the righteous, but what tends to their spiritual and eternal advantage; but the wicked shall be quite overwhelmed with inward plagues and outward calamities. 22. Lies and liars are remarkably hated and abhorred of God; but they who, in their speeches and whole conduct, act in truth, fidelity, and candour, are beloved, and shall be blessed by him. 23. A prudent man conceals the knowledge he has, except when called by Providence to use it for the benefit of others, and even then makes no boasting ostentation of it; but a fool, through thoughtlessness, rashness, or ambition to be esteemed wise, proclaims his own weakness and ignorance. 24. Diligent and prudent activity in honest callings is the way to obtain riches, honour, and authority; but laziness and villany render men poor and enslaved. 25. Anxious cares about the things of this world, griefs for disappointments and troubles, convictions of sin, and fears of hell, depress the most magnanimous spirit, and make it to pore disconsolate over its wretchedness: but good instruction and advice from friends, and especially the promises of God powerfully applied, revive and make it glad. 26. In his state of union with Christ, justification and adoption, in his inward graces, and his exercises of holiness, and in his abundant happiness, a righteous man is more excellent than his neighbour; but the way that the wicked takes to render himself great or happy, only deceives and disappoints him, and issues in misery. 27. Lazy wretches cannot endure to prosecute their own schemes for obtaining earthly enjoyments; or what they have deceitfully obtained never affords them any real comforts, but, as it were, slips through their fingers, or rots at their side, or is taken from them: but the wealth and honour, which is obtained by an honest diligence, is extremely valuable and lasting, being blessed of God. 28. In receiving Christ as our wisdom, righteousness, sanctification, and redemption, and walking in him, there is a real possession of life spiritual, and a certain prospect of life eternal; nor is there a single act of piety or virtue that tends to make a man miserable.

Chap. XIII.—Ver. 1. Wise children will reverently receive, obey, and submit to their parents' instructions, advices, and corrections; but there is no hope of him who laughs and scoffs when he is admonished or chidden for his faults. 2. He, who lays himself out in instructing, advising, and comforting others, or in other edifying discourse, shall be regarded by men and rewarded by God: but evil speakers shall be forced to endure those miseries which they brought upon others. 3. He that carefully bridles his tongue, thinks well before he speaks, and takes heed to utter nothing improper or unseasonable, preserves himself from much trouble and danger: but he who is extremely talkative, throwing out everything that comes into his head, is in the ready way to be ruined, both by God and by man. 4. Nothing, neither riches, nor learning, nor honour, nor happiness, is to be gotten by mere sluggish desires, without diligent endeavours; but they who, in a dependence upon God, industriously use proper means, shall have sufficiency of outward things, and abundant comforts in Christ, both here and hereafter. 5. A righteous man not only carefully avoids, but hates, all manner of falsehood in heart, word, and deed; but a wicked man continues to impose upon others, till his detected falsehoods and villanies render him evidently odious to God and detested by men, as a stinking carcass; and so contemptible that he dare not show his face for shame. 6. They, who have Jesus' righteousness imputed to them, and his grace implanted in them, and who study uprightness and equity in their whole conduct, shall be preserved sound in the faith, steadfast in the obedience of the gospel, unmoved by Satan's temptations or the world's frowns or smiles; but the wicked man, and all his wicked contrivances, shall be overthrown by their own iniquity. 7. Some, in their pride and vanity, make a great show of wealth, wisdom, or grace, when they are worth nothing: while others, by their garb, or their speeches, conceal their abundant riches, knowledge, or grace. 8. Riches are so far from rendering men truly happy, that they tempt others to rob or accuse them, that their lives may be saved by huge sums of money; whereas the poor is reckoned so inconsiderable, that nobody thinks it worth while to rob, accuse, or even rebuke him. 9. The holiness, comfort, and prosperity of the righteous continues in its brightness and glory: but the small appearance of comfort and happiness which the wicked enjoy in this world, will quickly be extinguished in endless misery. 10. Pride is the principal, and often the sole, cause of quarrels and contentions, and of the continuance of them: the opinionated cannot bear contradiction; the aspiring, a rival; the self-willed, opposition: but they, who piously consult their God and their Bible, and prudently advise with their discreet neighbours, transact things in quietness and peace. 11. Wealth, gotten by fraud, gaming, theft, oppression, or the like, having the curse of God upon it, shall quickly be wasted: but that which is gotten by honest industry and diligence shall continue and increase. 12. The delay of that which a man eagerly expects renders his mind very uneasy; but when he enjoys what he long desired and looked for, it is sweet, satisfactory, and reviving. 13. He, who despises God's word, or the advices of his faithful friends, shall quickly be ruined: but he, who reverently submits himself to, and obeys God's commandments, shall be rewarded. 14. The instructions of a good man, and much more the doctrines of God's word, refresh, comfort, and enliven the soul, and preserve from those pernicious principles, and destructive practices, by which many are insnared. 15. A prudent, pious, and regular behaviour, is most amiable and acceptable to all men: but the behaviour of lawless and wicked persons, like a rough way, is very ruinous to themselves, and offensive to God and good men. 16. Prudent persons undertake nothing but with due deliberation, and what they understand: and manage their affairs with knowledge and discretion: but fools discover their weakness, by rashly meddling with matters out of their reach. 17. Unfaithfulness in discharging his trust, or delivering his message, will bring a wicked servant, ambassador, or minister, into shame, condemnation, and misery: but he who acts faithfully, procures safety and advantage both to his master and himself. 19. It is a high satisfaction to enjoy what we desire, especially spiritual blessings and comforts: but foolish sinners hate to forsake their lusts and sinful practices, even as means of receiving the choicest benefits. 22. By gaining his estate in a just and upright manner, and by doing good with it while he lives, and by earnest instruction of, and fervent prayers for, his family, a good man takes the surest course to fix his estate upon them for many generations: but the sinner leaves a curse entailed upon his wealth: and, by the righteous providence of God, it is quickly transferred from his family to one that is truly pious and virtuous. 23. Poor men, by their diligent labour and industry, many times abundantly provide for themselves and family, and even grow rich; while others, who are rich, are reduced to poverty, through their ignorance, rashness, injustice, oppression, deceit, &c. 24. That fond affection, which restrains parents from duly correcting their children when they do amiss, is a real and ruinous hatred, a sinful withholding from them a mean, appointed by God, for their amendment and happiness: but parents, who truly love their children, will study, by early and Christian corrections, to prevent their fixing in evil habits or customs. 25. A righteous man never wants satisfaction, because his desires are moderate, and he lives in a temperate use of God's blessings; God gives him a competency, a heart to use it, and contentment in it: but wicked men, insatiable in their desires, and extravagant in the abuse of their plenty, shall be indigent in the midst of abundance, or reduced to the distresses of poverty.

CHAP. XIV.—Ver. 1. A virtuous wife, by her piety, prudence, good economy, and the like, supports and advances her family in honour, happiness, and wealth: but a wicked imprudent wife, by her pride, prodigality, idleness, carelessness, or otherwise, will quickly reduce a happy family to poverty, disgrace, and ruin. 2. By a universal regard to piety and virtue, men manifest the fear and holy reverence of God implanted in their heart: but, by an obstinate rebellion against his laws, and eager study to gratify their sinful lusts and passions, they discover their profane contempt of his Majesty. 3. The insolent, calumniating, and contemptuous speeches of proud men are very injurious and wounding to others, and often at last prove a scourge to themselves: but the prudent, peaceable, and pleasing words of wise men, neither offending God nor men, secure them in safety. 4. They who would have plenty must be content with the dirt that labour makes; or, if the tillage of the fields be neglected, famine must follow; but laborious tillage will issue in great plenty. 6. Proud self-conceited scoffers at what is holy and serious are never like to profit by their studies, or to come to the knowledge of divine truth; whereas they, who humbly, and dependently on God, apply themselves to search out truth, quickly attain to the knowledge of whatever is necessary and useful. 7. It is proper to flee from the company of such persons as discover the corruption of their heart in the vanity or wickedness of their words. 8. Prudent men chiefly study to know how to act in their own calling and religious course; but wicked men employ their knowledge and wit to deceive others. 9. Insensible of the evil, malignity, and danger of sin, wicked men harden themselves in it, please themselves with their own and other men's sins, sport themselves in the commission or recollection thereof, and so provoke God to wrath against them; but they, who are afraid of, hate, and avoid sin, truly love and regard their neighbours, and obtain favour with God and man. 10. No one can know what another inwardly suffers in worldly griefs and vexations, or in troubles of conscience; neither can they share with him in his inward joys, particularly those of a spiritual nature. 11. The stately houses, wealthy and honoured families of the wicked, shall in wrath be reduced to ruin and misery, and their hopes of eternal happiness issue in everlasting despair; whereas the poor and unsettled family of the truly pious shall flourish and become illustrious. 12. There is need strictly and impartially to try courses and customs: for prejudice, self-flattery, affected ignorance, and the like, make many things seem lawful and good which are really sinful and ruinous. 13. Immoderate joys and pleasures are ordinarily mingled with, and issue in, inward vexation and anguish: and the diverting of inward convictions and important duties by carnal mirth, will quickly issue in the weepings and wailings of eternal despair. 14. He, who even in heart revolts from God and his ways, shall be fearfully overwhelmed with the punishment of his sin; but a good man, who steadfastly cleaves to the Lord, shall enjoy great comfort in the testimony of a good conscience, and in keeping God's commands. 15. Weak half-witted persons believe every idle story and plausible pretence, and thereby are drawn into evil: but prudent men examine things before they trust to them or practise them. 16. A wise man, when warned of his error or danger, fears to displease God or to provoke his wrath, and immediately starts back from the sin to which he was tempted, or in which he had involved himself: but a fool rages against those that reprove, warn, or threaten him, and goes on resolutely in sin, fearless of any danger. 17. He who is soon angry involves himself in rash and imprudent words and actions, for which he is to be pitied: but a man who conceals his wrath, and deliberately contrives how to take a cruel revenge, deserves to be hated and abhorred. 18. Inconsiderate sinners hold fast their wickedness, and delight in it, as their portion and inheritance, till they feel the woful effects of it: but the prudent, to their remarkable honour and influence, increase in spiritual understanding. 19. Even in this world the wicked are often obliged to stoop and submit to the righteous, and implore their favour and relief: and at the last day, the debasement of the wicked, and exaltation of the righteous, shall be complete. 20. If a man fall into poverty, his neighbours, who once professed great friendship, will forsake and disregard him: but if a man grow rich, many, who before took no notice of him, will pretend great affection to him, and even the greatest will offer him their favour. 21. He who overlooks and contemns his poor neighbour provokes God to punish and render him miserable: but he who compassionately relieves the poor shall be blessed by God on that account. 22. They who contrive mischief against their innocent neighbours miss their end, and ruin themselves: but they who study to do men real good shall be graciously and faithfully rewarded by God. 23. Industrious labour, in any lawful calling, will bring in some gain: but talkativeness and proud boasting tend only to make men beggars. 24. Riches are a singular ornament and advantage to wise men, who know how to use them, because thereby they have the greater opportunities of doing good: but riches only render foolish men's folly the more notorious, because they have thereby the greater opportunities of doing mischief and wickedness. 25. An upright witness will, at all hazards, avow the truth, to save the lives or characters of such as are falsely accused: but deceitful men will boldly pour forth lies and calumnies to destroy the innocent. 26 They that fear God may be confident of his protection to themselves and their posterity in times of danger. 27. A holy regard to God, and obedience to his law, will issue in men's solid and eternal comfort, and preserve them from those sinful courses in which many are insnared to their own destruction. 28. Kings ought to cherish their subjects; for on their number, wealth, and power, their own honour depends; and if they be wasted by unnecessary wars, or forced by oppression into other countries, it will prove the ruin of the kingdom. 29. He, who under great provocations can maintain a calmness of temper, discovers much wisdom and grace: but he, who is hastily inflamed by reproaches and ill-usage, exposes his corruption and folly, and makes it apparent to every one. 30. Nothing more conduces to health and happiness than a mind renewed by God's Spirit, freed from the dominion of sinful lusts, quiet, gentle, and contented: but envy, and such like fretful passions, torment men's spirits, waste their bodies, and hasten them towards hell and the grave. 31. He that defrauds or oppresses the poor, or withholds the relief which their circumstances require, forgets and even practically blasphemes God, who makes them poor, and engages himself to defend and relieve them: but he who hath any due respect to God will show pity to the poor, and labour to supply them. 32. In death the wicked is suddenly and irresistibly driven away from all his beloved hopes and enjoyments, in his sinful state; and often, in the very act of sin, and always on account of it, into everlasting misery: but the righteous, being united to Christ, clothed with his righteousness, and sanctified by his indwelling Spirit, has, even in trouble and death, well-grounded hopes of eternal felicity. 33. Prudent men study to grow in grace, and in the knowledge of Christ, without making unseasonable or ostentatious demonstrations of it: but foolish men expose themselves by their eager desire to vent their minds in every company. 34. Religion and virtue, equity and kindness, through the blessing of God, increase the glory, power, and wealth of a nation: but rebellion against God, or injuring of mankind, disgraces and ruins societies. 35. A prudent, active, and faithful minister of state, cannot but be dear to a wise king: and one, who by his ill management disgraces his government, and brings all things into confusion cannot but be the object of his wrath.

CHAP. XV.—Ver. 1. Mild, submissive, and yielding answers pacify anger and wrath: but sharp, contemptuous, and impertinent language increases passion, or kindles it up where it was not before. 2. A wise man gives profitable instructions, and understands how to speak in a seasonable and prudent manner: whereas fools, by the worthless stuff they utter, and by their indiscreet and confused manner of expressing their thoughts, only manifest their own folly. 3. The infinite knowledge and observance of God extends everywhere, and to every person or action, thought or disposition, whether good or bad. 4. Wholesome and profitable discourses instruct the ignorant, comfort the grieved, heal breaches, cure contentions among neighbours, and soften the exasperated; but corrupt, proud, passionate, and erroneous discourse disturbs the peace, and corrupts the temper and manners, of both speakers and hearers. 5. Inattention to the instructions, advices, and reproofs of superiors, manifests and issues in the greatest folly; but he who willingly receives rebukes, and carefully observes them, shows himself wise, and prudently consults his own welfare and happiness. 6. A truly pious, just, and merciful man, is really very rich; as, however little of this world's wealth he may possess, he has all things working for his real advantage, and God's blessing on what he has, and is contented with it: but vexation and trouble imbitter the revenues of the wicked. They are gotten with anxiety, enjoyed under a curse, employed in the service of sin, and tend to their ruin. 7. Wise men tender good instructions, advices, and reproofs to all around them: but foolish men, having their heart filled with ignorance and lust, impart nothing valuable. 8. All the external devotions, and most liberal almsgivings of wicked men, are so far from recommending them to God's favour, that they are abhorred by him, as but the vile gratifications of their own pride, legality, or other lusts; but the most humble prayers and meanest services of those united to Christ, which are performed in faith and dependence on him, and sincerely aiming at his glory, are exceedingly acceptable to him, and issue in much comfort to themselves. 9. The whole designs, contrivances, thoughts, words, and actions of wicked men are abominable to the Lord; and this renders their religious services corrupt and hated: but he loves such, as having Jesus' righteousness imputed to their souls, do, in their thoughts, affections, and endeavours, earnestly study to perfect holiness in his fear. 10. Such as dislike faithful reproof, for their apostasy from the ways of the Lord, shall be severely punished; and at last, if they continue haters of admonition and advice, shall certainly be damned. 11. The state of the dead and damned, and every other thing unknown to us, are perfectly known to God. How exact then must be his knowledge and observance of the dispositions, purposes, and thoughts of men! 12. Mockers of God and religion shun the admonitions of their conscience, and hate such as reprove them; and even avoid the company of wise, religious, or virtuous persons, lest they should meet with their reproofs or advices. 13. When the conscience is graciously purged and quieted, and the mind comforted, it issues in outward health and cheerfulness: but grief and sorrow, seizing on the heart, disturb, weaken, and dispirit it, and make a man a burden to himself and to all around. 14. Such as are truly wise, and inwardly instructed by the Spirit of God, earnestly study to obtain more solid knowledge: but persons void of true understanding gape after, and relish nothing but frivolous, vain, and unprofitable things. 15. All the days of persons discontented under their afflictions are grievous and miserable: but they who have their conscience graciously quieted, their heart joyful in God, and content with their lot, have more true and perpetual comfort and satisfaction than can be enjoyed in the most delicious banquet on earth. 16. A very small share of earthly enjoyments, attended with real grace and true holiness, is better than the largest abundance of wealth with the disquiet, confusion, and anxious care which usually attend it. 17. The meanest fare, attended by the mutual love of friends, is far preferable to the most sumptuous entertainment attended with hatred and contention. 18. Hasty, passionate, and furious persons, are apt to quarrel for very trifles, and so disturb the most peaceable company: but those who are humble, meek, and patient, instead of raising strife themselves, will labour to compose it when it has been raised by others. 19. A slothful man is apt to fancy or pretend a great many unconquerable difficulties in the way of his duty: but a good and active person looks on his way as easy and plain, notwithstanding a few trifling hinderances. 20. Nothing so much rejoices the hearts of pious parents, as to see their children grow up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord: but foolish children requite their mothers' fond indulgence by irreverent carriage towards them; and by despising their commands, instructions, advices, or reproofs, and so making them contemptible. 21. They who are void of grace, sense, and consideration, take pleasure in doing the most empty, absurd, and wicked things: but such as are truly knowing and wise, study for their own pleasure and comfort, as well as for the honour of God, to conduct their thoughts, words, and actions, in a regular, sincere, and holy manner. 22. Without prudent counsellors, and for want of due deliberation, the most important designs and projects often miscarry: but where, by prudent consultation, difficulties are foreseen and provided against, men's purposes succeed to their wish. 23. Ready, pertinent, and seasonable advice is an honour and comfort to him who gives it, especially when the good success of it is found, and it is very profitable to him who receives it. 24. Holy and gracious persons, in the pursuit of everlasting life, set their affections and hopes on things above, have their conversation in heaven, and eye the glory of God in everything they do, that they may escape sinful pollutions, horrid dangers, and everlasting destruction. 25. God takes pleasure to debase the proud, demolishing their stately houses, overturning their families, and ruining their honours and wealth: but he will preserve poor widows, who have no helper, in their rights, against every insolent or covetous invader. 26. The Lord abhors the thoughts, inclinations, purposes, and contrivances of wicked men: but the hearts of the godly, being purged by his blood and Spirit, their prayers, and edifying instructions, advices, and reproofs, are pleasant to him and his people. 27. They who hasten to be rich, and with anxious care labour for worldly enjoyments, not only harass all around them, but weary themselves, and plague their families, and bring the curse of God on what they have: but he who hates bribes, and other unlawful methods of gain, shall have a competent portion of the good things of this world, and comfort and prosperity in it. 28. A good man avoids answering before he is asked, and studies to say nothing but what is pure, profitable, suitable, and seasonable: but a wicked man is apt, in a rash and forward manner, to speak what is unsuitable, sinful, and hurtful. 29. The Lord utterly dislikes wicked persons, and refuses to regard their prayers: but he is ever willing and ready to hear the prayers of the godly offered to him in faith, and is their sure and present help in time of work or warfare. 30. It is a remarkable pleasure to behold the manifold works of God: and the good report of a given and offered Saviour, and of reconciliation to God and eternal salvation, or even a good report, of ourselves or neighbours, affords inward satisfaction and comfort. 31. They who with pleasure listen to and improve wholesome instructions, tending to promote their spiritual or eternal life, increase in wisdom, and shall be qualified to give good instruction to others. 32. Such as refuse or contemn proper instructions or reproofs undervalue their own soul, neglect the means of its safety, and, for the sake of some outward and perishing thing, wilfully ruin it: but he, who delights to be taught and admonished, increases in solid, soul-comforting, and saving knowledge, wisdom, and prudence. 33. A holy awe of God, and real regard to his way, disposes us to the study of true wisdom and knowledge, and is a certain mark of it; and humility, and patient submission in a low condition, is the best preparation for honour and preferment.

CHAPTER XVI.

(1) Power and providence of God. (2) Prerogatives of a king. (3) Evil of pride, deceit, &c.

THE preparations of the heart in man, and the answer of the tongue, is from the LORD.*

2 All the ways of a man are clean in his own eyes: but the LORD weigheth the spirits.

3 Commit thy works unto the LORD, and thy thoughts shall be established.

4 The LORD hath made all things for himself; yea, even the wicked for the day of evil.†

5 Every one that is proud in heart is an abomination to the LORD: though hand join in hand, he shall not be unpunished.‡

6 By mercy and truth iniquity is purged;§ and by the fear of the LORD men depart from evil.

7 When a man's ways please the LORD, he maketh even his enemies to be at peace with him.

8 Better is a little with righteousness, than great revenues without right.

9 A man's heart deviseth his way: but the LORD directeth his steps.

10 A divine sentence is in the lips of the king; his mouth transgresseth not in judgment.‖

11 A just weight and balance are the LORD's: all the weights of the bag are his work.

12 It is an abomination to kings to commit wickedness: for the throne is established by righteousness.*

13 Righteous lips are the delight of kings;† and they love him that speaketh right.

14 The wrath of a king is as messengers of death: but a wise man will pacify it.

15 In the light of the king's countenance is life; and his favour is as a cloud of the latter rain.

* Various changes of translation have been proposed in this verse, all tending to say that "man hath the disposing of the heart; but the answer, or power to answer with the tongue, is from the Lord. But, by whatever authorities supported, these changes are certainly to be rejected; for surely the thoughts of the heart are as much in the hand of God, as are the answers of the tongue. The translation of Holden is to be preferred: "The deliberations of the heart in man, and the utterance of the tongue, are from Jehovah.—Ed.

† It does not mean that God created the wicked on purpose to condemn them eternally. God created man upright, and for his own glory; man, by the abuse of his free will, "fell from the estate wherein he was created"--and the finally impenitent God hath appointed to a righteous sentence in the day of final judgment." CHAP. XVI.—Ver. 1. Every right inclination, thought, or purpose in the heart, and all right management of our words, are entirely the free gift and work of God. 2. Ignorance and self-conceit make men often to think themselves faultless and holy in their conduct, when the Lord, who searches and judges the intentions and frame of the heart, finds it quite otherwise. 3. Commit whatever works you undertake to the direction and management of God in his providence, and implore his blessing therein, so shall your honest desires be accomplished. 4. God made and manages all creatures for his own service, and for the manifestation of his glorious perfections; yea, even the wicked to be instruments of his just vengeance, and at last the objects of it, by continuing in their impieties. 5. When men are inwardly proud, on account of their gifts, honours, or wealth, God hates them, and will certainly punish them in their pride. 6. By God's exercise of his mercy and faithfulness in giving his Son, and fulfilling his promises, men's iniquity is expiated, pardoned, and subdued; and even, by their exercise of mercy, equity, and fidelity, the punishment of sin in outward calamities is often prevented. And by the fear of God implanted in the heart, and a continued holy regard to his law, men hate, watch against, and avoid sin; and so escape the fearful consequences of it. 7. When a man makes it his habitual and earnest endeavour to receive Christ, and walk in him soberly, righteously, and godly, the Lord, or his God reconciled in Christ, inclines even those who were his foes to become his friends. 8. A small estate honestly gotten, and cheerfully enjoyed, is preferable to vast incomes heaped up by oppression, and kept without hospitality. 9. A man's mind fixes its end, contrives the means, and perhaps reckons upon the success: but the Lord determines the event, and orders every motion and step taken towards it. 10. The edicts, commands, and decisions of kings ought always to be directed by the unerring law of God; and their decisions ought to be so just and exact, that no man may be wronged thereby. 11. The Lord requires that, even in our private dealings, everything, even the smallest, should be managed with the most scrupulous integrity and equity. 12. Kings, being in the most exalted station, ought to be distinguished patterns of piety and virtue, and to countenance it in others, as the only security of their throne. 13. Kings ought highly to value and love sincere and faithful advisers, who truly inform them of what tends to their own and their kingdom's welfare. 14. The wrath of a king is almost as terrifying as a message of death, and, especially in despotic governments, often issues in death to its object: but virtuous and prudent courtiers will pacify it, and make a reconciliation. 15. The favours and gracious smiles of a prince are extremely reviving and comfortable, and fruitful of expected happiness, especially to such as he had been formerly incensed against. 16. But real religion, and a solid understanding to discern between good and evil, are preferable to all the wealth that kings can bestow or industry procure. 17. It is the constant aim and endeavour of upright men to decline everything that is evil, and to follow that which is good: and by heedful care of their thoughts, words, and actions, their souls and bodies are, through the grace and providence of God, preserved from destruction. 18. Pride and haughtiness are the ordinary forerunners of debasement and misery, and the means of bringing it on men. 19. It is better, in imitation of Christ and his dear saints, to submit to the meanest condition, and patiently to bear injuries, than to partake of victories, spoil, and wealth, along with the proud. 20. They who understand business thoroughly, and manage it prudently and discreetly, bid fair to have good success: but it is only by trusting in God that true and everlasting happiness can be obtained. 21. They, whose heart is well furnished with experimental knowledge of God's word, take the proper method to obtain a high reputation for wisdom and prudence; and, if they can with eloquence and clearness communicate their instructions, it will greatly tend to the edification of others. 22. Spiritual knowledge and grace are the beginning and earnest of eternal life, are comfortable to him who enjoys them, and useful to others: but the learning of fools is frivolous and vain; and even their instructions do but render men foolish. 23, 24. The enlightened mind of a wise man instructs him to speak judiciously and pertinently, gives weight of evidence to what he says, and renders it pleasant to the hearer, as a honeycomb is to the mouth, and nourishing and strengthening as marrow is to the bones. 25. Many are highly pleased with their own ways, even when they are such as tend to their ruin, spiritual, temporal, and eternal. 26. He that, prompted by his wants, labours in worldly employments, procures his own preservation in life: whereas he, who labours in plaguing others, will find even every evil word tend to his own hurt. 27. Wicked men, with great pains, contrive and labour to do mischief, as if treasures could be gained by it: and their lying, slanderous, and insolent speeches, are very injurious, painful, and destructive. 28. Persons of a perverse, passionate, and contentious spirit, raise dissensions among those who are inclined to live at peace; and they who secretly defame, backbite, detract, and whisper about false stories, make breaches between the kindest neighbours and dearest relations. 29, 30. Such as are eager to do mischief, or live by violence and rapine, not content to do wrong themselves, entice others to become their companions, and then lead them into the most pernicious courses. With profound study they contrive the ruin of others; and then, by their advice, or giving of the sign, it is furiously effected.——33. Events to us are fortuitous as the lot which is cast into the lap of a garment, or into a hollow vessel: but to God all things are known, and all decreed; and nothing, no not the drawing of the lot, happens but according to his eternal counsels, and by the particular direction of his providence.

CHAP. XVII.—Ver. 1. The meanest fare, enjoyed in peace with God and our neighbour, and with quietness in our own mind, is better than the most sumptuous cheer, attended with brawling, contention, and strife. 2. A pious and prudent servant ought to be preferred to a foolish and wicked child, and deserves a share of the inheritance in a family. 3. As gold and silver are tried and purified in the fire, so the Lord, who searches the hearts of all men, proves and refines his own people from their sinful dross in the furnace of affliction.——6. It is an honour to parents to have a numerous posterity walking in holiness and virtue; and it is the honour of children to have pious and prudent ancestors.——8. Presents and bribes appear so lovely and tempting, that few can refuse them, or decline gratifying the desire of the giver. 9. Overlooking of injuries, and mutual forbearance, is the best way to preserve and increase friendship and love: but repeating old faults breaks the strictest bonds of friendship, and makes an irreconcilable separation. ——11. Some men are so wilful and refractory, that, shaking off all reverence to God and their superiors, they are wholly and irreclaimably bent on mischief; they must therefore be cut off by some exemplary punishment. 12. It is less dangerous to meet a bear in the heat of his rage, than a furious fool in the pursuit of his unruly passions and desires.——14. When men begin a quarrel, it gradually becomes more and more violent and extensive, till it is with difficulty made up: it is best therefore to check and stifle all contentions in the beginning. 16. In his mysterious providence, God gives to many foolish persons natural abilities, worldly substance, and opportunities of learning wisdom; and yet gives them no sense or inclination to desire it. 17. A true friend continues constant in his affection and usefulness, however our circumstances alter: and a brother, who deserves the name, is especially kind and helpful in a time of adversity. 18. He is extremely foolish whose kindness hurries him into rash suretiship for the debts of others, especially when they are suspected of knavery. 19. He certainly loves wickedness who accustoms himself to brawling and contention: and he, who carries himself proudly, scornfully, and contemptuously towards others, lives above his estate, and builds sumptuous houses, hurries himself into ruin; and breakers of the public peace open wide the flood-gates to all impiety. 20. A man of wicked devices, which he resolves to accomplish by any means, shall find himself deceived in his expectations of good: and a false, deceitful, and self-inconsistent tongue, will prove the ruin of its owner. 22. Nothing more conduces to health than solid quietness of conscience, and a moderate cheerfulness of spirit: but excessive sadness and grief waste the body, and dry it up to a mere skeleton. 23. Many wicked persons, who would refuse an open bribe, will willingly enough take bribes or presents secretly, in order to influence them to give counsel or judgment contrary to law and equity. 24. A pious and prudent man has his mind fixed upon the unerring oracles of God, and has his sense and wisdom at hand to guide and govern him; but a foolish one has his thoughts always wandering and roving about impertinences, and is never in any fixed or serious temper.——27. The more wise and knowing a man is, he is the less apt to be talkative, speaking only what is fit and necessary; and his wisdom renders his mind and temper humble, calm, temperate, and dispassionate. 28. So great a virtue it is to be duly silent, that if even a foolish person restrain his lips from rash and impertinent talk, he is for the time reckoned a wise and intelligent person.

THROUGH *desire a man having separated himself, seeketh and intermeddleth with all wisdom.†

2 A fool hath no delight in understanding, but that his heart may discover itself.‡

3 When the wicked cometh, then cometh also contempt, and with ignominy reproach.§

4 The words of a man's mouth are as deep waters, and the well-spring of wisdom as a flowing brook.

5 It is not good to accept the person of the wicked, to overthrow the righteous in judgment.

6 A fool's lips enter into contention, and his mouth calleth for strokes.

7 A fool's mouth is his destruction, and his lips are the snare of his soul.

8 [a] The words of a [‖] tale-bearer are *as wounds, and they go down into the † innermost parts of the belly.

† Through desire of real knowledge, a man having separated himself from secular business, seeks, not some solitary department of study, but expatiates over all subjects, as did Solomon; for by the student of real knowledge, every subject is found to lead to the knowledge and the love of God, and in that all wisdom lies.—Ed.

‡ The fool seeks not knowledge from any love of it, but from the vain desire to display his own accomplishments.—Ed.

CHAP. XVIII.—Ver. 1. While self-conceited persons seek to distinguish themselves by their high pretences to wisdom, and inconstant ones seek, but never find satisfaction, they, who have a true desire of knowledge, disengage themselves from all avocations, in order to study true wisdom. 2. A vain man studies knowledge, or even religion, for no other end but to make a show with it. 3. Wherever wicked men come, they bring their contempt of God, and reproaching of religion along with them, which will at last issue in contempt and misery to themselves. 4. A wise man's words, as deep waters, flow calmly, and contain the deep mysteries of God: and his heart, being full of wisdom, is ever sending forth streams of instructive, refreshing, quickening, and fructifying influences to all around him. 5. It is exceeding great wickedness to pervert justice, and, through favour or interest, to connive at, and acquit the wicked, or to give the cause against a righteous man through prejudice or partiality. 6, 7. Fools, by meddling in other men's quarrels, or by speeches irritating others against them, procure mischief, and even lasting and eternal ruin to themselves. 8. The slanders and reproaches of tale-bearers, however covered over with pretences of sorrow, and however greedily they be received by the hearers, like mortal and incurable wounds, pierce to, and rankle the very heart. 9. Idleness and prodigality are nearly allied, and both issue in the ruin of the persons guilty of them. Negligence about our soul is as fatal as open and avowed ungodliness. 10. Jesus Christ, and all the perfections, promises, and providences of God in him, are an impregnable defence and satisfaction to all such as by faith flee to him: no enemy nor danger can ever hurt them. 11. It is only in his own conceit that the rich man's wealth appears a mean of remarkable safety either here or hereafter. 12. Pride in prosperity, forgetfulness of God, and despising of others, are certain means and forerunners of destruction: and humility, meekness, and patience, in a low condition, are the best preparation for honour and preferment. 13. He who, to show his quick parts, or through a forwardness of temper, answers to a matter before he hears it fully and understands it, shames himself, and manifests his folly. 14. A manly spirit, especially if encouraged and supported by the influences of the Holy Ghost, will bear up under manifold and sore calamities of an external kind: but if the spirit be wounded with melancholy dejection, and a sense of God's wrath, how insupportable is the case, till Jesus, by his blood and grace give relief! 15. Prudent persons, by diligent meditation, and by attentive listening to instruction, labour to increase more and more in wisdom. 16. There are few men so mean, base, or wicked, but large gifts and presents will procure their release from prison, nay, bring them into favour with great men, or even to the honour of waiting upon princes. 17. They, who are first in representing their case, ordinarily make it to appear right, and even prepossess the judge in their favour; but by diligent search into their allegations, their neighbours often find innumerable mistakes in their representations. 18. In some cases, where the parties contending are very powerful to maintain their pretensions, and the reasons strong on both sides, the referring of the determination to God by the lot is the proper method to put each into quiet possession of that which falls to his share. 19. No contentions are so sharp and obstinate as those between near relations and long-continued friends. It is easier to take strong cities, or to bow or break the strongest iron bars, than to make a reconciliation. 20. Great care ought to be taken about our words; for, according as they are wholesome, good, and edifying, or are bad and unsavoury, shall be our temporal or eternal reward for them. 21. Much evil, or much good, necessarily issues from the right or wrong use of our tongues: and as men love and accustom themselves to good or bad discourse, shall be their reward or punishment; nay, ordinarily they who love to talk much shall suffer by it. 22. To be provided with a pious, prudent, and active wife is a great blessing, and a singular instance of God's favour. 23. Not boldness, but modest entreaties and doleful supplications, become those who are poor and miserable: but rich men are too apt to be so elated with their outward circumstances, as to return haughty and harsh answers. 24. Such as have friends must study to behave towards them in a friendly manner, in doing them all good offices possible: and sometimes friends are found that will be more constant and faithful in helping us in the day of affliction than our nearest relations.

CHAP. XIX.—Ver. 1. A poor, honest, and upright man, is much more happy and honourable than a rich wicked man that makes no conscience either of speaking or acting in a wise or gracious manner. 2. When a man is ignorant, not knowing what to follow or what to avoid, he cannot become holy or happy. And he, who in a rash and unadvised manner pursues his purpose, cannot fail to commit many sinful blunders. 3. When a man's ignorance and wickedness have made him miscarry, he often blames the providence of God, and frets and murmurs against him. 4. When men grow rich, they are sure to have many courting their favour, and professing themselves their hearty friends; but when they become poor and need friends, even those who were formerly kind turn their backs on them. 5. False witnesses, and private calumniators, shall at last, however slowly, meet with the due punishment of their wickedness. 6, 7. Multitudes will court the favour of the great and liberal who can enrich or advance them; but everybody is apt to desert and contemn the poor, who need and beg their assistance. 8. He that receives Christ learns the true knowledge of God; and he, who strictly practises the direction of his word, shows a real regard to his own soul, and shall obtain the spiritual and eternal blessings which he needs.——10. Not plenty, prosperity, or pleasure, but rather stripes, are fit for fools: and much less is it proper for slaves to be able wantonly to domineer over princes, and men of great wealth or honour. 11. It is an evidence of great wisdom to be slow to anger: and it is a great honour kindly to pass over injuries, and return good for evil. 12. The frowns and wrath of a king are very terrible to his subjects, and make them apprehensive of ruin; but the tokens of his favour greatly refresh and invigorate their spirits. 13. An ignorant, headstrong, and impious son is a plague and grief to his parents; and a contentious wife is a gradual ruin to her family, so perpetually vexing her husband that he can scarcely live with her. 14. Persons may have houses and riches left them by parents; but a prudent wife is not obtained, even by diligent care, without the peculiar direction and blessing of the Lord. 15. Sloth and idleness sink the mind into a dull stupidity and unconcern, and thereby reduce men to extreme beggary and want. 16. He who carefully keeps the commandments of God as the rule of his life, secures the welfare of his own soul: but he that lives at random, led only by his own brutish inclinations, shall be miserable in time and in eternity. 17. He who compassionately relieves the necessities of the poor, really enriches himself; as what he gives is but lent to the Lord, and shall be repaid, with large interest and increase of blessings, upon him and his posterity. 18. Children ought to be faithfully corrected before they are fixed in evil habits and customs; nor ought their cryings or entreaties make parents abate the necessary severity towards them. 19. Men given to passion and fury bring themselves into great mischiefs: and if we extricate them out of one danger, they will quickly involve themselves in another. 20. To listen to instruction, and kindly receive reproofs, or even corrections, is the proper way to attain much solid and lasting wisdom and experience. 21. Many are the purposes and contrivances of men, and they often lay them with great care: but it is only the counsel of the Lord which can infallibly bring to pass whatsoever it pleases. 22. A desire to do good to others is a real kindness to them, though it be not in our power to effect it. And a poor man, who would fain do us good, is better than one who promises much and does little. 23. True godliness, and a religious care to please the Lord in all things, increase a spiritual life, and issue in life eternal. They afford the most satisfying comfort in God's favour, produce the most agreeable contentment with our lot, and are an excellent preservative both from sin and from suffering. 24. Sluggards are so much given to laziness and idle sauntering, that they can hardly be persuaded to take their meat, or do the most necessary and easy things. 25. Incorrigible sinners, and particularly scoffers at religion, and despisers of reproof, ought to be severely punished, as a warning to such as are inconsiderate; but such as are wise and prudent will need no more but a gentle reproof to make them learn their duty, and practise accordingly. 26. Children, who by their debaucheries waste their father's substance, and deal unkindly with their mother, disgrace their parents, and at last render themselves infamous and miserable. 27. Great care ought to be taken to avoid listening to false doctrine, sinful advice, or even idle and frothy language, as it tends to make us wander from the true doctrines of Christ, and practice of holiness. 28. An impious witness, whose conscience is so hardened that he can swear to anything, laughs at all law and justice, and even at the threatened judgment of God upon perjured persons: and the mouth of the wicked utters the most false, sinful, and mischievous speeches with greediness. 29. But terrible judgments shall certainly be inflicted upon those that scoff at conscience and religion; and indelible marks of God's displeasure shall be inflicted on those who slight good instructions.

CHAP. XX.—Ver. 1. Immoderate drinking of wine, or other intoxicating liquors, exposes men to the jest and detestation of others; it makes themselves abusive and scurrilous, mocking even at sacred things, and renders them like fools, sots, or madmen, furious, tumultuous and quarrelsome: while it seems to exhilarate the spirits, it deceitfully drowns both reason and conscience, and tends to the ruin of both soul and body. 2. The just wrath of a king is terrible: and they that offend

* Never place confidence in a thoughtless fool who pledges his word, character, or credit, for a stranger who has inveigled him. Above all, never trust an abandoned libertine, who, being "joined to an harlot," is dissevered from Christ (1 Cor. 6. 15, 16); and who, careless about his own soul, will never be faithful to your interest farther than he is bound by ties of law, and constrained by its compulsions.—ED.

† That is, either with him who flattereth you by pretending that he intrusts his secret to you as a special favour; or with him that is "open of his lips," as the words literally mean, and therefore tempted, by his spirit of talkativeness to fabricate and circulate falsehoods.—ED.

‡ The danger lies not in the speedy inflowing of wealth, but in the hasty spirit with which it is sought—a spirit that will soon learn to employ any means for obtaining its end, and that will finally defeat its efforts by its over-eagerness, and entail a curse because it grasped at riches as a possession, and sought them not as a blessing.—ED.

him, by exasperating language or behaviour, expose themselves to temporal and eternal ruin. 3. It is honourable to avoid contention to the utmost, and to get out of it as quickly as possible, by confessing our own faults, and forgiving those of our neighbours: but foolish and wicked persons are always ready to begin or maintain quarrels. 4. Such as, through indolence and self-indulgence, neglect their business in its proper season, may expect beggary and misery; while they who are diligent enjoy abundant felicity. 5. Some men, through their reservedness of temper, and others through deep design, conceal their intentions: but persons of great sagacity will discover them, or even by their artful insinuations, make themselves to declare them. 6. Most men will boast how friendly, humane, charitable, and generous they are: but it is hard to find one answerable in deeds to his trust, his relation, his promises or pretences. 7. Justified and gracious persons, by their practice, manifest the sincerity of their heart and profession; and their children are blessed of God, and regarded by men on their account. 8. A king, who makes it his business to execute judgment and justice faithfully, effectually suppresses crimes and impieties by his strict inspection of affairs. 9. No man on earth is perfectly free from sin in heart or life, nor can he make himself so. 10. To buy with larger weights or measures, and sell with lesser ones, and all other injustice, is extremely detestable to God. 11. Men's continued practice is the surest mark of their disposition, and by that the future conversation of young persons may be guessed at; and yet they, even children, often strangely conceal their vices. 12. All our natural faculties and senses, and the right use of them, are from God, and therefore ought to be employed for his glory. 13. Immoderate sleep, or other slothfulness, wastes our time, and draws on poverty and want: but watchful care, and diligent labours, are the means of obtaining everything necessary. 14. Some, while they buy goods, will dishonestly and falsely cry them down, and yet afterwards boast of their good bargain, and cheating the seller. 15. Wise and gracious speeches, proceeding from a wise and understanding heart, are more valuable than all the gold, pearls, or precious things on earth. 16. Never trust him, without a proper pledge, who rashly becomes surety for everybody, strangers and harlots not excepted; for he will quickly be reduced to beggary. 17. Gains, honours, and pleasures, acquired by unrighteous courses, may at first be extremely agreeable to men; but they will at last produce anguish of conscience, pangs of repentance, or torments of despair. 18. Deliberation with ourselves, and consulting with others who are prudent, is the way to obtain success in our undertakings, especially in matters of importance and danger. 19. It is always necessary to suspect flatterers, and to turn a deaf ear to tale-bearers, who, by treacherously revealing the secrets which others have intrusted to them, labour to insinuate themselves into our confidence, and then betray us. 20. Slighters, revilers, abusers, and wishers of mischief to parents, bring fearful and lasting ruin on themselves and posterity, however they may prosper for a time. 21. Many, by unrighteous courses, quickly become rich: but the foundation being laid in rapine, extortion, or fraud, it shall quickly waste away, or prove a curse to such as enjoy it. 22. Never revenge injuries received; but commit thy cause to God, who judges righteously; wait patiently in the use of lawful means for the fulfilment of his promises, and he will vindicate and deliver thee in his own time. 23. Injustice, even in the smallest things, is so extremely abominable to God, that it cannot be too much hated or avoided. 24. Men's thoughts, words, and actions, are all directed by God to his own ends: and none can certainly know beforehand what will be the issue of them. 25. A sacrilegious converting of what pertains to God, to our own private use, and studying how to be loosed from the obligations of solemn vows, terribly insnare men's souls, and bring certain ruin upon them. 26. Pious and prudent magistrates exert themselves to discourage and terrify the wicked, and punish them with proper severity. 27. The rational soul and conscience, especially when renewed by the Spirit of God, act as his deputies; discovering, judging, accusing, or approving whatever passes within us, according as it is contrary or conformable to God's revealed will. 28. Bounty and clemency, joined with justice and faithfulness to their word, are principal means of securing the government of princes, and entailing their kingdom on their posterity. 29. Strength, vigour, and courage, render young men respected, but gravity, wisdom, and experience, are the peculiar ornaments of the aged. 30. Severe corrections are necessary to restrain or reclaim some stubborn and obstinate tempers, and to purge out those corrupt affections which are lodged in the heart.

CHAPTER XXI.

(1) Excellence of mercy, justice, &c. (2) Vexatiousness of a brawling woman. (3) Cruelty of the wicked, &c.

A. M. cir. 3120. B. C. cir. 976.

THE king's heart is in the hand of the LORD, as the rivers of water:* he turneth it whithersoever he will.

2 Every way of a man is right in his own eyes: but the LORD pondereth the hearts.

3 To do justice and judgment is more acceptable to the LORD than sacrifice.†

4 ‡An high look, and a proud heart, and ‖the ploughing‖ of the wicked, is sin.

5 The thoughts of the diligent tend only to plenteousness; but of every one that is hasty, only to want.

6 The getting of treasures by a lying tongue is a vanity tossed to and fro of them that seek death.

7 The robbery of the wicked shall *destroy them;† because they refuse to do judgment.

8 The way of man is froward and strange: but as for the pure, his work is right.

9 It is better to dwell in a corner of the house-top,‡ than with §a brawling woman in ‖a wide house.

10 The soul of the wicked desireth evil: his neighbour *findeth no favour in his eyes.

11 When the scorner is punished, the simple is made wise; and when the wise is instructed, he receiveth knowledge.

12 [a]The righteous man wisely considereth the house of the wicked: but God overthroweth the wicked for their wickedness.†

13 Whoso stoppeth his ears at the cry of the poor, he also shall cry himself, but shall not be heard.†

* Rather, as water-courses for irrigation.—Ed.

† This is no condemnation of sacrifice under the law, nor warrant for neglect of ordinances under the Gospel. Thus saith the Lord, "These ought ye to have done, and not to leave the other undone." Mat. 23. 23. —Ed.

† There are two views of the subject. (1) Several nations live by robbery, and reckon it an honourable employment. Yet, in the end, all such communities, like the piratical Algerines and murderous Thugs, are brought to destruction. (2) There is a robbery of God, when he is defrauded of that worship, honour, and glory, that are due to his name, which must finally terminate in the destruction of the guilty. Mal. 3. 9.—Ed.

† Not "he that stoppeth his ear at the importunity of the poor" is condemned, for that importunity is often the result of vice, idleness, or fraud: but he that disregards "their cry" when it arises, as in a child, from want or pain that they cannot supply or relieve.—Ed.

‖ Never did the world appear in a more hopeless state than a little before the dawn of the blessed reformation. The human mind was enslaved to authority and tradition—an authority without charter from God, a tradition without name, till manufactured on emergency. The consciences of men were prostrate before the shrine of the confessional; their spirits were terrified into cowardly submission by the fires of an imaginary purgatory; and the walls of spiritual Babylon were high, as unto heaven. Yet these walls were scaled, and this city was taken, not by "power nor by might," but by a few "wise men"—men "made wise unto salvation" by the Scriptures, (2 Tim. 3. 15.) and strong and victorious by the Spirit of truth, and love, and holiness.—Ed.

14 [b]A gift in secret pacifieth anger; and a reward in the bosom strong wrath.

15 It is joy to the just to do judgment: [c]but destruction shall be to the workers of iniquity.

16 The man that wandereth out of the way of understanding shall remain in the congregation of the dead.

17 He that loveth *pleasure shall be a poor man: he that loveth wine and oil shall not be rich.†

18 The wicked shall be a ransom for the righteous, and the transgressor for the upright.‡

19 It is better to dwell §in the wilderness, than with a contentious and an angry woman.

20 There is treasure to be desired and oil in the dwelling of the wise: [d]but a foolish man spendeth it up.

21 He that followeth after righteousness and mercy findeth life, righteousness, and honour.

22 *A wise man scaleth the city of the mighty, and casteth down the strength of the confidence thereof.‖

23 Whoso keepeth his mouth and his tongue keepeth his soul from troubles.

24 Proud and haughty scorner is his name who dealeth *in proud wrath.

25 The desire of the slothful killeth him; for his hands refuse to labour.

26 [f]He coveteth greedily all the day long: but the righteous giveth, and spareth not.

27 The sacrifice of the wicked is abomination: how much more when he bringeth it †with a wicked mind?

28 ‡A false witness shall perish: §but the man that heareth speaketh constantly.

CHAP. XXI.—Ver. 1. The wills, inclinations, and purposes of kings and others, are entirely under the direction and government of God: and he can turn them whithersoever he pleases, as easily as the gardener, or husbandman, can turn his canals of water. 2. Men, through their self-love, often fancy their own purposes and works to be extremely right; while the Lord, who perfectly knows their hearts, observes them to be very defective or sinful. 3. Uprightness of heart, and holiness and virtue of life, are more pleasing to God than the most pompous devotions, or the most liberal benefactions or alms. 4. Not only the insolence, pride, and ambition of wicked men are criminal before God, but all their natural, civil, and moral actions, and all their worldly greatness and prosperity, lead to sin; and all they do is sinful in its principle, manner, and end. 5. Prudent contrivances, and laborious industry, are the proper means of plenty and affluence: but hasty resolutions, precipitant measures, and unjust methods, involve men in trouble and loss. 6. The getting of wealth by lying, flattery, calumny, or perjury, is a beguiling and unprofitable course, however much used by such as walk in ways leading to destruction; and the wealth thus obtained, is as unsubstantial and transient as heaps of chaff, or clouds of smoke, before the wind. 7. The injuries which wicked men do to others, in rendering their families poor or desolate, shall, in most ruinous punishments, be returned upon their own heads, because they are wilfully bent upon their unjust dealings. 8. The whole temper and course of a wicked man are contrary to the law and nature of God, and odious to him: but they, whose consciences are washed in Jesus' blood, and their hearts renewed by his grace, walk in good works, acceptable to God, and profitable to men. 9. Better is it to live poorly and solitary in the open air, exposed to all the injuries of the weather, or to be thrust into some little corner, than have a spacious house and numerous family, governed by a contentious wife, whose perpetual scolding and brawling, on the smallest occasion, is more intolerable than thunder, lightning, or blustering winds. 10. A wicked man's heart desires to be ever doing mischief, and to have others falling into it: nor will he spare good or bad, friend or foe, if, by reproof or otherwise, they stand in the way of his covetousness, ambition, or other lusts. 11. When obstinate scoffers at the laws of God and men are punished in providence, or by the magistrates; others, particularly such as they have seduced, will bethink themselves what they are doing: and wise men will improve instructions and admonitions, to render themselves wiser and better. 12. While righteous magistrates search the houses of the wicked for ill-gotten goods, and in order that they may be duly punished, and deprived of power to do further mischief, godly men, in order to deter them from like courses, consider the judgment and ruin which God brings on the wicked for their sins. 13. They who refuse to help the poor in distress shall be reduced to misery themselves, and have none to pity or help them. 14. Presents, especially if secretly and prudently given, have a powerful influence to appease angry and wrathful men. 15. The execution of justice, and the practice of holiness and virtue, are a pleasure to the righteous; but are a terror and burden to the wicked, whom God and the magistrates shall concur to destroy. 16. He that will not live according to the directions of God's word, but follows the conduct of his own lusts and passions, shall, after all his extravagancies, be for ever fixed in hell. 17. Voluptuous persons destroy their own pleasures, by wasting their estates; and they who are given to costly and delicious feeding can never thrive. 18. Wicked men often fall into the very miseries which they had prepared for the godly; and in times of common calamity, are often severely punished, that the righteous may be delivered. 20. True wisdom enables men to procure what is necessary for their families, and to enjoy it with satisfaction; but foolish persons lavishly waste, what they neither know how to get or how to live without. 21. They who make it their business to receive and improve Jesus Christ and his righteousness and grace, in a life of holiness and virtue, shall find every new-covenant blessing in time and eternity. 22. Wise men, by their prudence, kindness, and perseverance, can effect the most difficult enterprises, and do more than others who have much more strength. 23. Restraint of the tongue from impure, false, profane, rash, injurious language, greatly preserves men from troubles, embarrassments, and miseries. 24. Pride, insolence, and outrageous words, only render men infamous and contemptible. 25, 26. The slothful man is killed by an insatiable desire after that which he has not, and will not labour for; but pious and diligent persons have enough for themselves, and also wherewith to relieve others. 27. All the appearances of devotion and piety about unrenewed persons being hypocritical, proceeding from a wicked principle, done in a wicked manner, and to a wicked end, are abominable to God. 28. The testimony, character, and soul of a false witness shall quickly be ruined: but he that speaks nothing but what he knows to be true, is fixed and invariable in his attestations. 29. Impenitent sinners refuse to blush at their abominations, and obstinately resolve to go on in them; but sincere saints carefully conduct their thoughts, words, and actions, by the rule of God's word. 30. No projects, however wisely laid, or prudently conducted, can defeat or alter the purposes, or counteract the providence of God. 31. Neither horses, chariots, nor powerful armies, can obtain victories, or even protect their owners: but all safety and salvation are of, and effected by, the Lord himself.

CHAP. XXII.—Ver. 1. A good character, qualifying men to be useful for God in their generation, and the noted respect and friendship of those among whom we live, are more honourable and comfortable than all the riches of the world. 2. The rich by their wealth, and the poor by their labour, are mutual supports of each other, and ought to live together in harmony and kindness, as the same Lord made them both, and appointed them their respective conditions. 3. Prudent men foresee calamities, or temptations, when approaching, and use proper means for securing themselves; but foolish and inconsiderate persons go on securely in their sins, and are ruined. 4. True humility, and real godliness, are the certain way to honour and happiness in this world, and in that which is to come. 5. Wicked men meet with much trouble and danger in their sinful ways: but he that takes proper care of his soul shall be preserved therefrom, and enjoy manifold blessings. 6. Let children be carefully instructed in the truths, and accustomed to the ways of God, as early and earnestly as possible, and they will retain the impression, and practise the same, as long as they live. 7. Rich men domineer over the poor; and they who borrow, are obliged to depend on the will and pleasure of the lender. 8. He, whose common practice is to do mischief, shall be paid in his own coin, with misery and trouble; and at length his power of wronging others shall be taken from him. 9. They who compassionately observe the wants of the poor, and cheerfully relieve them, shall be largely rewarded of God. 10. The removal of graceless persons, who scorn all good counsels, from a society, is an excellent mean to compose the contentions therein, and to prevent strifes and mutual reproaches for the future. 11. He that loves and practises sincerity and plain-heartedness, will recommend himself even to princes, by the piety, pleasantness, and candour of his discourse. 12. God, in his providence, carefully preserves his own oracles and ordinances among men, and provides for, preserves, and honours those who are thereby made wise unto salvation: but he blasts all the counsels and designs of the wicked and perfidious. 13. Slothful persons imagine mighty hinderances in the way of their duty, where there are none, or at least very few. 14. Nothing is so dangerous, so eternally dangerous, as the insnaring flatteries of whorish women, and the enslaving influence of fleshly lust. If a man be insnared by them, nothing but infinite mercy and power can prevent his utter and everlasting destruction. And seldom are any, who have not provoked the Lord by former wickedness, permitted to fall into these snares. 15. False opinions, and bad inclinations, adhere so closely to the minds of children, that not only instructions and reproofs, but even seasonable and duly severe chastisements, must remove their obstinate folly. 16. He that by violence or fraud oppresses the poor to enrich himself, or gives to the rich what he took from the poor, or what he should give to relieve their wants, shall himself be reduced to want and beggary. 17. Attend diligently, and consider seriously, the counsels and precepts of wise men, and particularly those given in this book. 18. For it will afford thee great satisfaction heartily to embrace, thoroughly to digest, and faithfully to preserve them in thy mind: and by these means thou wilt be qualified to instruct others in them. 19. Men who are quick and dexterous, but prudent, in despatching whatever business is committed to them, are in a fair way to be preferred to some honourable employment in the service of their prince.

CHAPTER XXIII.

(1) Deceitfulness of dainties, &c. (2) Warnings against drunkenness, gluttony, and lasciviousness, &c.

WHEN [a] thou sittest to eat with a ruler, consider diligently what is before thee:[*]

2 [b] And put a knife to thy throat,[†] if thou be a man given to appetite.

3 [c] Be not desirous of his dainties; for they are deceitful meat.[‡]

4 [d] Labour not to be rich; [e] cease from thine own wisdom.

5 [§] Wilt thou set thine eyes upon that [f] which is not? for riches certainly make themselves wings; they fly away as an eagle toward heaven.

6 [g] Eat thou not the bread of him that hath [h] an evil eye,[‖] neither desire thou his dainty meats:

7 For as he thinketh in his heart, so is he: [i] Eat and drink, saith he to thee; but his heart is not with thee.

8 The morsel which thou hast eaten shalt thou vomit up, and lose thy sweet words.

9 [k] Speak not in the ears of a fool; for he will despise the wisdom of thy words.

10 Remove not the old [*] land-mark; and enter not into the fields of the fatherless:

11 For their Redeemer is mighty; he shall plead their cause with thee.

12 [l] Apply thine heart unto instruction, and thine ears to the words of knowledge.

13 Withhold not correction from the child; for if thou beatest him with the rod, he shall not die.[†]

14 Thou shalt beat him with the rod, and shalt deliver his soul from hell.

15 [m] My son, if thine heart be wise, my heart shall rejoice, [‡] even mine:

16 Yea, my reins shall rejoice [n] when thy lips speak right things.

17 [o] Let not thine heart envy sinners: [p] but be thou in the fear of the LORD all the day long.

18 For surely there is an [§] end; and thine expectation shall not be cut off.

CHAP. XXIII.—Ver. 1. When you are honoured with a seat at the table of a great man, remember that you are in danger, if you take not heed to your behaviour, considering what and how you eat, what and how you speak, and to whom. 2. And avoid, as you would avoid death, every approach to intemperance and folly in language, as well as excess in eating and drinking; and so much the more if thou art given to such weakness. 3. Never show a fondness for delicate provision; for it often betrays men into excess, or into some indecent unwarrantable behaviour. 4. Never labour immoderately with heart or hand to obtain riches; and never depend on thy own prudent management, but on God himself, for the success of thy undertakings. 5. Never set thy mind or affections upon riches, nor pursue with eagerness what perhaps thou canst never attain; for if thou dost, they may suddenly and irrecoverably be taken from thee, and become witnesses against thee before God, with respect to thy guilt in pursuing or abusing them. 6. Never receive an obligation from a sordid, covetous, and churlish wretch; and never let the best cheer tempt thee to accept of his invitation to a feast: 7. For he is to be judged of by the disposition of his heart, not by his fair words. And while he flatters and urges thee to eat, he has no real kindness for thee, nor in the least wishes thee to make use of his provision. 8. When thou seest his sordid carriage, it will make thee repent thy tasting of his dainty meats, or paying any regard to his kind but deceitful compliments. 9. The wisest counsels and reproofs, addressed to fools and scorners, will be but contemned and trampled under their feet. 10, 11. Never encroach upon the property of the fatherless, or others who have no help in man: for the Almighty God will take their part, redress their grievances, and revenge the injuries done to them. 12—16. If parents carefully instruct and correct, and children seriously regard and receive their instruction, and submit to their correction, it will greatly promote the happiness and comfort of both. 17, 18. Never envy the prosperity of sinners; but study to live in favour and in humble fellowship with God. Thus shall thy troubles quickly have an end, and the expected blessings of eternity be enjoyed by thee, while the prosperity of sinners shall be turned into everlasting misery. 19—21. Carefully study true wisdom, and let thine heart be exercised in faith and holiness. Avoid all intimacy with intemperate persons; for they and their slothful brethren will quickly reduce themselves to outward, and even eternal misery. 22—25. Pay the utmost regard to the instructions, reproofs, and good example of parents: spare no pains or cost to know, embrace, and hold fast the truths of God; to find out and walk in the true way of salvation, and to grow in the knowledge of Christ, and never part with it upon any account. Thus shalt thou be a remarkable blessing and comfort to thy parents. 26—28. Receive my counsels with thy whole heart, that it may be filled with, and fixed on a God in Christ; and carefully observe and follow my directions and example. Thus shalt thou be delivered from whorish women, by whose enticements multitudes are seduced into manifold wickedness and irrecoverable ruin. 29—35. Carefully avoid all drunkenness, and every occasion of or temptation to it, as it occasions bloody quarrels, inflames fleshly lusts, and animates to whoredom: it fills the mouth with obscene, rude, profane, or senseless discourse; it renders the head stupid and giddy; it hardens men in wickedness; and, in fine, issues in misery, both here and hereafter.

CHAPTER XXIV

(1) Cautions against envy, intemperance, unmercifulness, &c. (2) God and the king to be honoured, &c.

A. M. cir. 3029.
B. C. cir. 975.

BE not thou [a] envious against evil men, neither desire to be with them;[*]

2 [b] For their heart studieth destruction, and their lips talk of mischief.

3 [c] Through wisdom is an house [†] builded, and by understanding it is established;

4 And by knowledge shall the chambers be filled with all precious and pleasant riches.

5 [d] A wise man [‡] is strong; yea, a man of knowledge [§] increaseth strength.

6 [e] For by wise counsel thou shalt make thy war: and in multitude of counsellors there is safety.[‖]

7 Wisdom is too high for a fool; he openeth not his mouth in the gate.

8 [f] He that deviseth to do evil [*] shall be called a mischievous person.

9 The thought of foolishness is sin; and the scorner is an abomination to men.

10 If thou faint in the day of adversity, thy strength is [†] small.

11 If thou forbear to deliver them that are drawn unto death, and those that are ready to be slain;

12 If thou sayest, Behold, we knew it not; doth not he that [g] pondereth the heart consider it? and he that keepeth thy soul, doth not he know it? and shall not he render to every man according to his works?

13 My son, eat thou honey, because it is good; and the honey-comb, which is sweet [‡] to thy taste:

14 [h] So shall the knowledge of wisdom [§] be unto thy soul: when thou hast found it, then there shall be a reward, and thy expectation shall not be cut off.

15 [i] Lay not wait, O wicked man, against the dwelling of the righteous; spoil not his resting-place:

16 For a just man falleth seven times, and riseth up again:[*] but the wicked shall fall into mischief.

17 Rejoice not when thine enemy falleth, and let not thine heart be glad when he stumbleth;

18 Lest the LORD see it, and [k] it displease him, and he turn away his wrath from him.[†]

19 [‡] Fret not thyself because of evil men, neither be thou envious at the wicked:

20 For there shall be no reward to the evil man; the [§] candle of the wicked shall be put out.

21 My son, fear thou the LORD and the king; and meddle not with [‖] them that are given to change:[*]

22 For their calamity shall rise suddenly; and who knoweth the ruin of them both?

23 [‖] These things also belong to the wise. It is not good to have respect of persons in judgment.

24 He that saith unto the wicked, Thou art righteous; him shall the people curse, nations shall abhor him:

25 But to them that rebuke him shall be delight, and [†] a good blessing shall come upon them.

26 Every man shall kiss his lips [‡] that giveth a right answer.[§]

27 Prepare thy work without, and make it fit for thyself in the field; and afterwards build thine house.

28 [m] Be not a witness against thy neighbour without cause; and deceive not with thy lips.

29 Say not, I will do so to him as he hath done to me; I will render to the man according to his work.

30 I went by the field of the slothful, and by the vineyard of the man void of understanding;

31 And, lo, it was all grown over with thorns, and nettles had covered the face thereof, and the stone-wall thereof was broken down.

CHAP. XXIV.—Ver. 1. Never envy the prosperity of wicked men, nor desire any intimacy or connexion with them. 2. For they contrive and labour to ruin others, that themselves may become rich and great; and, by lies, calumnies, and the like, they labour to undo them: but such conduct will at last bring destruction upon their own head. 3—6. True godliness, attended with prudence and diligence, is the proper method to procure estates, raise families, get wealth, strength, or victory. 7. Solid knowledge, and serious and sensible discourse, are above the reach of foolish inconsiderate persons; nor can they judge or advise to any purpose in public concerns. 8. The more art and contrivance there is in doing evil, the more malignity is there in it: and the doer ought to be held as ignominious and detestable. 9. The inclination to, and contrivance of, evil is sin; but he that makes a sport of sin, and contemns reproofs for it, ought to be abhorred by every person. 10. To give up all for lost, and be discouraged from duty, in the time of distress, is a great evidence of weakness in knowledge, wisdom, courage, and grace. 11, 12. If, pretending that thou didst not know their case, or how to relieve them, thou neglectest to exert thyself for the deliverance of persons, who, by hatred, envy, or false accusations, are in danger of losing their life, remember that God, who knows all the secrets of thy heart, who preserves thy soul in life, and observes all the motions of it, will severely punish thee, and give thee up to similar distress. 13, 14. As the most delightful satisfaction and nourishment are found in eating of honey, especially that pure part of it which drops from the comb, so shall solid and spiritual wisdom and knowledge be pleasant and profitable to thy soul, issuing in abundant, present, and eternal happiness, answerable to, and even far exceeding, thy most enlarged expectations. 15, 16. To attempt by craft or violence to ruin the righteous even under their affliction, is as vain as it is malicious: for though they may frequently fall into sin or trouble for a time, the Lord again raises them up: but wicked men are finally left in their sins, and plunged into irretrievable ruin. 17, 18. Never rejoice, no not in heart, when any private enemy of thine falls into sin or trouble, lest the Lord be thereby provoked to deliver him, and plunge thee into the miserable condition from which he is recovered. 19, 20. Never envy the prosperity of wicked men, nor be enticed to follow their impieties on account of it; for whatever may be their appearance, they can have no real happiness here, nor anything but eternal misery hereafter: and often their blaze of outward prosperity is quickly extinguished, and either they or their seed reduced to wretchedness even in this life. 21, 22. Always reverence, worship, and obey God as thy own God in Christ; and be humbly obedient to magistrates, as his deputies on earth. Never have anything to do with those who appear fond of novelties, either in religion or in civil government; for unexpected and inconceivably dreadful calamities shall unavoidably and violently seize upon such, and upon their associates. 23. If thou wouldest be and appear wise, abhor it, as a thing extremely sinful and ruinous, to regard persons in judgment on account of anything else but the merits of their cause. 24. Whoever, contrary to evidence, pronounces a wicked man innocent, or a bad cause to be good, exposes himself to the curses and detestation of men, and the fearful vengeance of God. 25. But they who labour earnestly to check vice, by the just punishment of evil-doers, shall have satisfaction in their own mind, and shall be remarkably blessed of God, and prayed for and commended by men. 26. Every person will highly honour and dearly love him who speaks the plain, naked, edifying, and seasonable truth, whether as a judge, a witness, or private person. 27. Never undertake or begin any weighty affair without deliberate thought and sufficient preparation. 28. Never rashly or groundlessly affirm or insinuate any thing to the hurt of thy neighbour's character: and never entice any one to believe or say ill of him. 29. Never, either in heart, word, or deed, revenge the injuries done to thee. 30—34. And, from the misery and want which others have brought upon themselves, by their negligence, sloth, or misspending of time, learn earnestly to avoid these things, as ruinous to thy outward estate, as well as to the spiritual and eternal happiness of thy soul.

CHAP. XXV.—Ver. 2. It is the glory of God that his counsels are unfathomable, and his works, either of creation and providence, so mysterious, that the wisest on earth cannot comprehend their nature, reason, or ends: but it is the honour of kings diligently to search the Scriptures, thoroughly to examine intricate causes, and dive into plots and conspiracies, or fully to display the reasons of their actions. 3. But vulgar minds can no more judge of the secret reasons of statesmen, than they can perfectly search and measure the heavens and the earth. 4, 5. As silver, when purified from its dross, may be framed into whatever vessels the founder pleases; so kingdoms may be established, in the most virtuous and happy forms, when wicked persons are removed from the counsels and company of kings. 6, 7. Never ambitiously affect, or thrust thyself into courts, or any places or stations that belong not to thee; for it will be more honourable and satisfying to be invited to them, than to be disgracefully thrust from the honours which thou hast arrogated to thyself, and that in the presence of the prince unto whom thou hast approached too near. 8—10. Never enter into any contention till thou hast well considered the goodness and weight of thy cause, and how to manage it, lest, in the issue, thou be plunged into perplexity, and covered with shame. And, if it be possible, make up matters privately, even where thy cause is good. And never let anger or hatred provoke thee to discover thy neighbour's secrets in order to disgrace him, lest such as hear of it not only reproach thee for thy perfidiousness, but even retort upon thee such shameful conduct, which will render thee infamous through life. 11, 12. A wise instruction, advice, reproof, or word of comfort, seasonably and properly given, is comely, valuable, and ornamental: and scarcely can anything be more ornamental in life than a ready and humble hearkening and submitting to wise and seasonable reproof. 13. Cold drink or air in harvest is not more grateful and refreshing to the reapers, than good servants or ambassadors are to their masters, by their speedy despatch of the important business committed to them, and faithful report of their success. 14. It is extremely empty and deceiving to boast of graces, virtues or abilities, which we have not, or to promise what we cannot, or care not to perform. 15. By patient submission and expectation princes are most readily pacified and persuaded: and humble, soft, and affectionate language bows the most stiff and hardened tempers, and overcomes even stubborn resolutions to the contrary. 16. Created comforts and pleasures are very agreeable, if used in due moderation; but otherwise they lose their relish, and plunge us into guilt and trouble. 17. To maintain a friendly intercourse with our neighbours is dutiful and pleasant; but too many, too long, or unseasonable visits, render us disagreeable and disliked. 18. Slander and a bearing false witness are most dangerous and murderous means of destroying our neighbour. 19. Confidence in an unfaithful person in the time of trouble, will, to our great anguish and grief, entirely disappoint us of help or relief. 20. As taking away clothes in winter increases our sense of cold, and vinegar irritates nitre, so unseasonable mirth renders a sad heart still more sorrowful. 21, 22. In time of need always render good for evil; and kindly bestow necessary supplies on such as have injured thee: thus shalt thou soften their rage, slay their hatred, and gain their affections; and the Lord shall reward thee with blessings, while he fearfully punishes them if they continue obstinate. 23. As the north wind in many countries dispels clouds and prevents rain, so frowns and rebukes check reproachful slandering and lying. 24. It is better to live cooped up in a corner, exposed to all the injuries of the weather, than in a large family and stately palace with a contentious, brawling, and scolding wife. 25. Good and certain news from a far country, where our friends and fortunes are, is expected with impatience, heard with delight, and believed and thought on with refreshing pleasure; but especially the gospel, which brings from God the blessed tidings of pardon, peace, grace, and salvation. 26. When righteous men are de-coyed into scandalous sins, or are degraded from their influence and authority, and oppressed and persecuted, it is as hurtful to a church or nation as if the public fountains were corrupted and poisoned. 27. To hunt after worldly applause and honours, however sweet they be to corrupt nature, is extremely disgraceful and dangerous. 28. And to be furious and passionate renders us useless and miserable.

CHAP. XXVI.—Ver. 1. Dignity and authority are very ill placed in the hands of foolish and wicked men, who know not how to use them, but will do mischief to themselves and others by them. 2. Causeless curses and imprecations can hurt the innocent no more than the birds that fly over their heads. 3. Obstinate, stupid, and refractory sinners, like beasts, must, by sharp punishments, be restrained from evil, and excited to good. 4. Answer not an ignorant and impertinent fool in his own brawling and reproachful manner, so as to imitate his impertinence. 5. Answer a proud conceited fool with such strength and evidence of reason, as may render him sensible of his folly, and check his pride. 6. He, who employs fools or rakes in any important business, deprives himself of the advantage he might have expected, and brings much inconvenience and mischief upon himself. 7. As dancing or walking by a lame man would but manifest his lameness, so the pretences of fools to wisdom do but render them the more ridiculous. 8. Honour bestowed upon fools is very unstable and useless, if not mischievous. 9. Grave, holy, and wise sayings upbraid fools for their impertinence and wickedness, however insensible they may be of the sharpest rebukes. 10. God, and even wise princes, punish sins of ignorance and wilful wickedness in a wise, just, and suitable manner. 11. Foolish sinners quickly, and often shamelessly, return to the very sins for which they have been sharply punished, and of which they have before repented, as grievous and hurtful. 12. There is more hope of the amendment of a sottish man, than of one who is so wise and virtuous in his own conceit, that he thinks himself above instruction. 13. They who have no mind to labour, never want pretences for their idleness; and their sluggish fancy represents to them the most improbable and insuperable difficulties. 14. It is almost a toil for such to turn themselves on their bed; and though they seem busy, they do nothing to the purpose. Though they move in the formal round of external duties, they are never a whit nearer to heaven. 15. Pretending cold, or inability, they can scarcely apply to any work; and it is almost a burden for them to take their meat. 16. But though they take no pains to acquire knowledge, they look upon themselves as perfect miracles in wisdom, and treat with absolute contempt every argument that can be used to convince them of their mistakes and danger. 17. It is extremely dangerous to engage in other men's quarrels and disputes, which do not belong to us. 18, 19. To wrong our neighbours, by either word or deed, and then pretend that it was in jest, discovers us to be stupidly insolent and diabolically mad. 20. A proper discouragement of tale-bearers, whisperers, and slanderers, is an effectual mean to prevent contentions, or even to extinguish such as are begun. 21. It is also necessary to avoid contentious persons, who, by their provoking language, kindle up or inflame quarrels, even as one inflamed coal or piece of wood kindles another. 22. The wounds given to men's characters, business, and spirits, by calumnies slyly and secretly spread, are extremely painful and hurtful, and sometimes will scarcely admit of a cure. 23. Malicious and angry language corresponds very well with an envious and wicked heart; and notwithstanding their fine show, scarcely anything is more detestable than affectionate words when used to cover hatred and enmity of heart; nor will the dissimulation pass long undetected. 24—26. Nothing is more common in the world than dissembled professions of regard and affection; and yet nothing more base, and in the end more hurtful and ignominious, to the user. 27. They who labour to destroy their neighbours, whether, by fraud or violence, involve themselves in the very mischiefs which they had intended for others. 28. Liars and slanderers chiefly hate those whom they have slandered, fearing that they may avenge themselves; and also those who confute their slanders. And flatterers ruin men, by drawing them into proud, rash, and pernicious courses.

6 [d] Faithful are the wounds of a friend: but the kisses of an enemy are [†] deceitful.

7 The full soul [‡] loatheth an honey-comb: but to the hungry soul every bitter thing is sweet.

8 [e] As a bird that wandereth from her nest, so is a man that wandereth from his place.

9 Ointment and perfume [§] rejoice the heart; so doth the sweetness of a man's friend [†] by hearty counsel.

10 [f] Thine own friend and thy father's friend forsake not; neither go into thy brother's house in the day of thy calamity: for better is a neighbour that is near than a brother far off.[‖]

11 My son, be wise, and make my heart glad, that I may answer him that reproacheth me.[*]

12 [h] A prudent man foreseeth the evil, and hideth himself: but the simple pass on, and are punished.

13 Take his garment that is surety for a stranger, and take a pledge of him for a strange woman.[†]

14 [i] He that blesseth his friend with a loud voice, rising early in the morning, it shall be counted a curse to him.[‡]

15 A continual dropping in a very rainy day and a contentious woman are alike.

16 Whosoever hideth her hideth the wind, and the ointment of his right hand, which bewrayeth itself.[*]

17 Iron sharpeneth iron; so a man sharpeneth the countenance of his friend.[†]

18 Whoso keepeth the fig-tree shall eat the fruit thereof; so he that waiteth on his master shall be honoured.

19 As in water face answereth to face; so the heart of man to man.

20 Hell and destruction are never full; so the eyes of man are never satisfied.

21 As the fining-pot for silver, and the furnace for gold, so is a man to his praise.[‡]

22 Though thou shouldest bray a fool in a mortar among wheat with a pestle, yet will not his foolishness depart from him.[§]

23 Be thou diligent to know the state of thy flocks, and look well to thy herds:

24 For riches are not for ever; and doth the crown endure to every generation?

25 The hay appeareth, and the tender grass showeth itself, and herbs of the mountains are gathered:[‖]

26 The lambs are for thy clothing, and the goats are the price of the field:

27 And thou shalt have goats' milk enough for thy food, for the food of thy household, and for the [*] maintenance for thy maidens.

Chap. XXVII.—Ver. 1. Never boast what thou wilt be, or do, in any future period; for thou knowest not what changes Providence may make in a very short time. 2. Never commend thy own excellencies or works; but leave that to others who cannot be suspected of partiality. 3, 4. The anger, cruelty, and rage of foolish men, are very intolerable, crushing, and hard to be appeased; but an envious desire of revenge is still more dangerous, as it lies hid, increases daily, and is more and more exasperated, till it find opportunity to vent itself in the intended mischief. 5. To tell men plainly of their faults, and rebuke them freely when need requires, is a more valuable piece of friendship than the strongest inward affection. 6. Just and seasonable reproofs, however severe, ought to be cheerfully received when they proceed from true love and faithful regard: but the most tender and abundant expressions of kindness from an enemy, ought to be suspected as false and treacherous. 7. Rich men are apt to be unsatisfied with, or even to nauseate, the most delicious enjoyments: but poverty disposes men to a ready and thankful reception of the smallest blessings, though mixed with care and labour. 8. When men, by levity or discontent, change their country, trade, or office, in which Providence had placed them, they ordinarily expose themselves to manifold dangers and inconveniencies, but rarely mend their condition. 9. The kind conversation, and prudent counsels, of affectionate friends, are extremely refreshing and comfortable. 10. Nay, such friends are more to be depended on in a time of distress than our nearest relations. 11. My son, improve these instructions, to make thee truly wise and good; which will at once comfort my heart, and enable me to refute such as charge me with want of due care about my children. 12. Prudent men foresee the approach of calamities, and take proper methods to avoid them; but inconsiderate persons, deceived by others, securely rush forward till they are ruined. 13. Never trust, without a sufficient pledge, a man that is so foolish and rash as to be surety for persons whom he knows not, and even for harlots. 14. Extravagant and flattering commendations of a friend or benefactor, are rather a disparagement than an honour, as it is a shame to have connexion with such silly sycophants. 15. A contentious and brawling woman is a continued plague, and a destructive ruin to her husband, family, and estate: 16. For it is quite impossible to conceal her infamous bawling humour, or to make her hold her tongue. 17. By mutual conversation friends quicken the wit, enliven the affection, strengthen the judgment, and animate the activity of one another. 18. Such servants as faithfully defend their master's person and reputation, and labour to preserve and promote his wealth, ought to be rewarded by him, and shall be honoured of God and men. 19. There is a surprising likeness in the tempers and dispositions of men, both among saints and sinners; and most are inclined to carry themselves towards others, as they do towards them. And they who are remarkably sagacious, can penetrate far into the inclinations and designs of others. 20. It is impossible to satisfy the corrupt desires of men: the more they are indulged, the more they crave: and nothing but the fulness of God can satisfy the desires of an immortal soul. 21. Nothing more effectually tries a man than high commendations. If he be light, vain, frothy, and easily puffed up by them, it discovers his emptiness: but if under them he be humble, modest, and sensible of his own defects, it manifests him truly valuable. 22. Some are so hardened and stupified in their sinful courses, that no reproofs or corrections can make them a whit better. 23—27. Masters should look after the management of their worldly affairs themselves, and not leave all to servants; for, without due care and diligence, the richest estates will soon come to nought: whereas, by a proper care of the hay, grass, herbs, and flocks, which Providence bestows, they may enjoy a most comfortable livelihood for themselves and families.

Chap. XXVIII.—Ver. 1. Guilt makes men cowards; but conscious integrity makes men courageous, and proceed with undaunted resolution in the most hazardous undertakings. 2. To punish the wickedness of nations, God permits them to fall into factions, or murder their sovereigns; but a prince of remarkable piety and prudence is extremely useful for settling or preserving a state.

3. A needy man placed in power, and squeezing from the poor that little which they have, is a most ruinous scourge to a nation. 4. Apostates from the ways of God are the most forward in encouraging men in wickedness, and commending them for it: but they who resolutely observe God's law, do what they can to reform or punish them. 5. Unregenerate men have no solid or experimental knowledge of what is right or wrong: but they who study God's word, and depend on his instructions, understand whatever is necessary to salvation. 6. A poor man, who acts honestly and uprightly in all he does, is far happier, and more useful and commendable, than a rich pretender to virtue, who obstinately and craftily practises vice. 7. He is an honour to his parents, as well as to himself, who studies the law of God, and observes the rules of piety and sobriety there prescribed: but he that associates himself with rakes, drunkards, and gluttons, and spends his time and money in sensual pleasures, is a shame and vexation to them. 8. God often translates the wealth, gotten by covetousness and oppression, from the gatherers, into the hands of such as are merciful and benevolent. 9. The very prayers, and other religious services, of them who obstinately live in their sins, are, in God's view, an abominable and hypocritical prostitution of his ordinances, since it appears as if they thus intended to make him a partner in their wickedness. 10. They, who by their persuasion, example, or cunning contrivances, seduce upright men into sinful and dangerous practices, shall themselves irrecoverably fall into that very mischief which they intended for others: but they who live in simplicity and godly sincerity, shall enjoy the blessings of grace here, and of glory hereafter. 11. Rich men, being courted and complimented by every one, are apt to imagine themselves extremely wise: but sensible and religious persons, however poor, quickly discern their emptiness and ignorance. 12. It is an honour and happiness for a nation, when pious and prudent men are advanced to places of power and trust: but when the wicked are exalted, the persons, lives, and estates, especially of good men, are in danger, and they are obliged to conceal them. 13. He that conceals, extenuates, or defends his sins, exposes himself to severe punishments: but he, who through faith in Christ, confesses and forsakes them, shall be graciously blessed by God, and honoured by men. 14. Happy is he who lives under the constant awe of God's perfections, and under a jealousy of his own evil heart, and a fear to do evil: but he that obstinately and presumptuously goes on in his sinful courses, shall irrecoverably and eternally perish. 15. How cruel and terrible a plague is a tyrannical ruler! His subjects, unable to resist, are harassed by oppression, and terrified with fears of still greater evils.—17. Murderers shall never be able to escape the vengeance of God; but shall hurry themselves into sudden and irretrievable destruction, without any one to help or pity them. 18. Real godliness, strict honesty and integrity, are the sure road to safety, honour, and happiness: but fraudulent sinners, obstinate in their wickedness, shall quickly involve themselves in the depths of misery. 19, 20. They who believe in Christ, and act with diligence, fidelity, and candour in their dealings, shall have abundant blessings from God, and honours from men: but they who hasten to be rich, render themselves execrable by their base and fraudulent methods. 21. When judges have accustomed themselves to respect persons in judgment, the most insignificant bribe will make them disregard both law and equity, and favour an unrighteous cause. 22. He that hastens to be rich, envies every body who has more than himself, covets whatever he sees, and grudges to part with the most necessary expense or alms; and never seriously thinks how quickly God may take him from his wealth, or by his curse, blast it to him, and leave him in deep poverty, or remove it to others. 23. They, who in an honest and friendly manner, reprove a man for his faults, will afterwards have much more of his favour and regard, than they who flatter him in his sins. 24. They who snatch all that they can from their parents, are as bad as common robbers, and are in a fair way to associate themselves with such. 25. A man of a proud, insolent, and ambitious spirit, involves himself in perpetual quarrels, and has no satisfaction in what he enjoys; nay, many times wastes his estate in contentions: but he, who, trusting in the Lord to redress his grievances, patiently bears injuries, lives comfortably and happy. 26. Nothing is more foolish, than to rely wholly on our own wisdom and ability, or to trust in our own heart, which is deceitful above all things, and desperately wicked: but he who walks according to the counsels of wise men and the directions of God, shall escape, or be delivered out of, manifold dangers and troubles. 27. He who kindly and cheerfully relieves such as are in want, shall thereby increase his own estate: but he that avoids taking notice of their miseries draws upon himself the curse of God and of men. 28. When wicked men are increased in number, and advanced in authority, good men are obliged to hide themselves from their tyranny and persecution: but when God casts down the wicked, the righteous take courage, and openly show themselves; and their numbers are increased under pious and prudent governors.

CHAPTER XXIX.

Observations on public and private government; pride, theft, cowardice, &c.

A. M. cir. 3029. B. C. cir. 975.

HE [a]that, being often reproved, hardeneth [†]his neck, shall suddenly be destroyed, and that without remedy.

2 When the righteous are [‡]in authority, the people rejoice: but when the wicked beareth rule, the people mourn.

3 Whoso loveth wisdom rejoiceth his father: [§]but he that keepeth company with harlots spendeth his substance.

4 The king by judgment establisheth the land: but [‖]he that receiveth gifts [¶]overthroweth it.

5 A man that flattereth his neighbour spreadeth a net for his feet.

6 In the transgression of an evil man there is a snare: [b]but the righteous doth sing and rejoice.

7 The righteous considereth the cause of the poor: but the wicked regardeth not to know it.

8 Scornful men [*]bring a city into a snare: but wise men turn away wrath.

9 If a wise man contendeth with a foolish man, whether he rage or laugh, there is no rest.[†]

10 [‡]The blood-thirsty hate the upright: but the just seek his soul.

11 A fool uttereth all his mind: but a wise man keepeth it in till afterwards.

12 [c]If a ruler hearken to lies, all his servants are wicked.[§]

13 The poor and [‖]the deceitful man[*] meet together; the LORD lighteneth both their eyes.

14 The king that faithfully judgeth the poor, his throne shall be established for ever.

15 The rod and reproof give wisdom: but a child left to himself bringeth his mother to shame.

16 [d]When the wicked are multiplied, transgression increaseth: but the righteous shall see their fall.[†]

17 [e]Correct thy son, and he shall give thee rest; yea, he shall give delight unto thy soul.

18 Where there is no vision, the people [*]perish: but he that keepeth the law, happy is he.[†]

19 [f]A servant will not be corrected by words;[‡] for though he understand he will not answer.

20 Seest thou a man that is hasty [§]in his words? there is more hope of a fool than of him.

21 He that delicately[‖] bringeth up his servant from a child, shall have him become his son at the length.

22 [g]An angry man stirreth up strife, and a furious man aboundeth in transgression.

23 A man's pride shall bring him low: but honour shall uphold the humble in spirit.

24 [h]Whoso is partner with a thief hateth his own soul: he heareth cursing, and bewrayeth it not.[*]

25 [‖]The fear of man bringeth a snare: but whoso putteth his trust in the LORD [†]shall be safe.

26 [k]Many seek [‡]the ruler's favour: but every man's judgment cometh from the LORD.

27 An unjust man is an abomination to the just; and he that is upright in the way is abomination to the wicked.

CHAP. XXIX.—Ver. 2, 4. Where justice is impartially executed, and liberty and property secured, the nation grows great and happy; but bribery and oppressive taxes ruin a state. 5. Flatterers artfully draw men into wickedness and ruin. 6. In the wicked course of sinners, one sin draws on another and its attendant plagues; but the godly, by walking in Christ, obtain solid and lasting joy and comfort.—— 8. Obstinate sinners, and scornful men, by laughing at all things serious, sacred, or civil, throw nations and cities into the most ruinous disorder; but pious and prudent rulers, by their prayers and piety, avert the deserved vengeance of God, and by their wise conduct, divert the fury of men. 9. It is to no purpose to spend reasonings or reproofs upon incorrigible fools; for in whatever manner they appear to take them, they will still persist in their folly and wickedness. 10. Blood-thirsty men direct their murderous malice especially against godly magistrates, or other valuable persons; but such as are truly virtuous labour to defend and promote the welfare of such. 11. Fools inconsiderately speak out whatever comes into their head; but wise men think well before they speak, and only utter what they know, and as the opportunity requires. 12. If a ruler hearken to lies, flatteries, or false accusations, his whole court will quickly become so wicked, that it will be hard to find an honest man in office. 13. Poor men who want estates, and rich men who get, or increase their estates by fraud, are connected together in this world, and the Lord, without distinction, allows to both his light of nature, or revelation, and blessings of providence, as is good in his sight. 14. Kings who faithfully administer justice to their subjects, and set themselves to protect and help the poor, take the most proper course to gain their subjects' affection, and to continue their kingdom to many generations. 15. Careful instructions and reproofs, and prudent corrections, are of great use to render children wise, prudent, and pious: but children, left to follow their own inclinations, prove a disgrace and plague to parents, particularly to their indulgent mothers. 16. When wicked men are increased in number, and advanced in dignity, presumptuous wickedness abounds more and more: but the righteous ought not to be discouraged, as they shall quickly see their downfall. 17. Children, carefully brought up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord, bid fair to be a help and comfort to their parents. 18. Where men want the oracles of God, and ordinances of the gospel, they cannot but live wickedly on earth, and be miserable in eternity: but great is the present and future happiness of such as, renewed by his grace, strictly observe his laws. 19. No persuasion, reproofs, or threatenings, will avail with some refractory and slavish-minded servants; nothing but blows will make them regard what is said, or attend to their duty. 20. It is more easy to instruct and reform the most weak and ignorant, than to rectify what is amiss in a rash, heady, and self-conceited manager of his affairs. 21. If servants, who continue long in a family, be too much indulged or favoured, they are apt to behave with as much boldness and freedom, as if they were children; or even to domineer over them, and labour to disinherit them. 22. Passionate persons are apt to quarrel and contend about trifles, and to fall into a multitude of sins, in word or deed, both against God and men. 23. Proud, saucy, and ambitious behaviour, renders men contemned, hated, and miserable; but meekness and humility, procure useful and lasting honours. 24. Partnership with thieves, or fraudulent persons, endangers both soul and body, and is apt to involve men in perjury. 25. An immoderate fear of men insnares us into much guilt and mischief: but he that puts his whole confidence in God shall be preserved from them. 26. Multitudes court the favour of princes and other great men: but it is God alone who determines the lots of men here and hereafter. 27. There is a stated antipathy between the righteous and wicked; their natures, tempers, counsels, and ends, being the very reverse of each other.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAP. XXX.—Let me thus always think meanly of myself, and highly of my God and Saviour, and of his works and word; and be a good savour of Christ to all around me. Earnestly should I covet further degrees of holiness, but be regardless as to the comforts and enjoyments of this life, and content with such things as I have. Let me never be a busybody in other men's matters, but heedfully watch against the temptations incident to my own condition. Let me never be an idle spectator of what is around me; but whatever evil I observe, let me avoid, hate, and mourn over it; and whatever good I observe, even in animals, let me, in a Christian manner, imitate the same. If I have proudly involved myself in sin, humbly should I repent of it, and always avoid contention before it be meddled with. Nothing is to be got by pride, passion, or ill language, but bloodshed and damage.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAP. XXXI.—What blessings might mothers be to families, churches, and nations, would they but carefully educate their children! And it is unnatural and irreligious when they do otherwise. When princes are given to whoredom and drunkenness, and regardless of the poor, or of the exact administration of justice, they are but a plague to the nation which they govern.—With great care and circumspection ought all, especially such as bear rule in church or state, to make choice of their yokefellows in marriage. And it is a great blessing to themselves, and all their connexions, if Providence direct them aright. But it is absurd and ruinous when wealth, beauty, or parentage, are preferred to real virtue and religion in the choice of wives or husbands. What a scandal to human nature is it when wives become the plague, the reproach of families! or when such, as are virtuous and prudent, are abused by husbands, unfaithful, drunken, imperious, cruel, outrageous, or churlish!—But infinite is the mercy, that God, by his grace, has formed from among sinful men a church of true believers, which, as the spouse of his Son, are made to answer this amiable and glorious description.

CONCLUDING REMARKS ON THE BOOK OF PROVERBS.

Solomon, we are told, (1 Kin. 4. 32.) composed no less than three thousand proverbs. As we count them, in modern verses, this collection does not contain so many. The conclusion, therefore, is, that many have been allowed to pass into oblivion, and that we possess but a part. If it be so, this is in no way to be wondered at in the case of Solomon, since we are told (John 20. 30.) that, even in the case of "a greater than Solomon," "many other miracles" are stated to have been wrought, which were not specifically recorded by the Evangelist. Next to the book of Psalms, the Proverbs of Solomon are most frequently quoted in the New Testament; and that, be it well observed, not merely as a treasury of moral precepts, but as a direct revelation of JESUS, as the wisdom of God, and the power of God.

If considered merely as a collection of moral precepts for the regulation of fathers, mothers, children, and servants in families—or of kings, magistrates, and subjects in states, it contains more true practical wisdom than all the philosophers of Greece, Rome, and more modern times, have ever been able to produce. Nor can there be any question that the ancient and most distinguished philosophers of Greece, borrowed the principles of their moral doctrines from these proverbs; and have, in two respects, surpassed the modern deistical moralists; first, in the superiority of their moral code; and, secondly, in the honesty wherewith they acknowledged the source from which they were borrowed.

The book of Proverbs seems naturally divisible into five parts:—

I. The first nine chapters containing various instructions and excitements to the study of the true wisdom—the knowledge of JESUS CHRIST, "the wisdom of God, and the power of God."

II. From x—xxii. 16, which contains what is properly called the Proverbs.

III. From xxii. 17, to xxv, inclusive, containing paternal instructions, speaking as unto children.

IV. Extends from xxv—xxix, inclusive, consisting of detached moral precepts, and is distinguished by having been "copied out" by "the men of Hezekiah."

V. Includes xxx, xxxi; the former containing the prayer, and instructions of Agur to Ithiel and Ucal: the other addressed to Lemuel by his mother.

The whole, if considered as a mere literary and philosophical monument of the Hebrews, in the days of their prosperity, would place them as far above "Greek and Roman glory," as the sun, in his brightness, is above a flickering and "sickly taper;" while, independent of all external evidences, the height, the depth, and immaculate purity of their morals, present an internal illustration of their divine origin, which no candid mind can possibly resist.—ED.

CHAP. I. Ver. 2. To know wisdom.—"To impart."—Boothroyd.——Ver. 32. The turning away of the simple shall slay them.—"The turning away" to worldly ease, carnal indulgence, and spiritual sleep.

CHAP. III. Ver. 25. Be not afraid of sudden fear.—"Sudden fear," or what is commonly called a panic, with "rumours of wars," "dire portents and omens," are continually disturbing the minds of men. But by all, the believer in Jesus remains unmoved. His Redeemer liveth—his sins are forgiven—he is accepted of God—he inherits the promises—Jesus is with him in the ship, and he trembles not in any storm that his Father may commission to try his faith.——Ver. 32. His secret is with the righteous.—This does not signify any secret information that God gives to the one, while he withholds it from the other, (for the grace of God hath appeared unto all men, teaching them that, denying ungodliness and worldly lusts, they should live soberly, righteously, and godly); but it signifies, God's residence in the hearts of believers, which this world can neither see, imagine, nor admit; and that secret comfort which he administers to them by his promises and Spirit, in the midst of all the public trials of which they are partakers, and that secret acquittal which he reports to their consciences, in the midst of all the public calumnies they may be condemned to underlie.

CHAP. VI. Ver. 1. If thou be surety for thy friend, if thou hast stricken thy hand with a stranger.—This is a passage of great practical difficulty. Does it, by implication, altogether forbid the aid of suretiship to friends? This cannot be; for, in many instances, such suretiship is indispensable. Does it, then, covertly condemn merely such "rash and inconsiderate engagements, as arise from an undue facility of temper, rather than from a deliberate calculation of duty?" Such covert insinuation of a principle is inconsistent with the plainness of Scripture. With great deference, the following slight and well warranted change in the translation is suggested:—"My son, if thou be surety to thy friend," see Gen. 24. 54. This makes the object of the passage to be a warning against any neglect of a friend's interest, (for which we have become accountable,) from any undue presumptuous draft upon his friendship—a most necessary warning; for in practice there are many who will neglect their own interests, and the interests of their best friends, for the eclat that may result from their attention and liberality to strangers.

CHAP. VIII. Ver. 1. Doth not wisdom cry? and understanding put forth her voice?—He that would understand this, and similar passages, may consult Is. 11. 2, 3, where he will find the seven gifts of the Spirit, enumerated as the endowments of Christ. And, as every attribute of God is but a name for his being—so the forth-putting of every separate attribute is but an account of the actings of his being in that special view. Accordingly, "wisdom and understanding" are here both used as titles of Christ—wisdom, to indicate his full comprehension of the interests and means of the house of God—understanding, to indicate his adequacy to sustain their weight, care, and management.

CHAP. XIV. Ver. 19. The evil bow before the good.—Sooner or later this event is always realized; and the temporary exceptions never finally weaken or contradict the general rule. It is now verified in every righteous judgment by an upright judge upon earth: it will finally be completed by the Judge of the quick and the dead.

CHAP. XV. Ver. 8. The prayer of the upright is his delight.—"The upright" are those who are not ashamed to look up with "boldness to the throne of grace, for grace to help them;" and their prayer a "delight to the Lord," because it renounces all the righteousness of the creature, and altogether relies upon the "righteousness of God which is by faith of Jesus Christ."

CHAP. XVI. Ver. 15. A cloud of the latter rain.—"The cloud of the latter rain," promising gentle showers, was considered as the promise of an abundant harvest. ——Ver. 31. Way of righteousness.—That is, following, and longing after Jesus, the Lord our only righteousness.

CHAP. XIX. Ver. 1. Perverse in his lips, and is a fool.—"Perverse with his lips, though he be rich."—Holden.——Ver. 2. He that hasteth with his feet sinneth.—He that hasteth with his feet, without judging by his head—who, more forward than thoughtful—must end in sin.

CHAP. XX. Ver. 30. Stripes.—Appropriate punishments restrain sinful appetites.

CHAP. XXIV. Ver. 30—32. I went by the field of the slothful—and received instruction.—"There is no darkness, nor shadow of death, where the workers of iniquity may hide themselves," Job 34. 22. Do as they may, they are detected even by the eye of man. Thorns, nettles, and broken walls, whisper the story of their owner's indolence, and point out the invisible spectre, poverty, as he advances in the guise of a hungry traveller, and discover the gleaming of those resistless arms with which he will soon destroy his thoughtless and self-devoted victim.

CHAP. XXX.—Ver. 2. I am more brutish than any man, and have not the understanding of a man.—Though of men I am the least learned, and human wisdom possess not; and, though in science I have had no instruction, yet of holy things have I knowledge."—Hodgson.——Ver. 19. The way of an eagle in the air, the way of a serpent upon a rock, the way of a ship in the midst of the sea, and the way of a man with a maid.—The eagle soaring high in air, its eye and appetite on earth, till, with the rapidity of lightning, it descends upon its unsuspecting prey.—The serpent scaling the lofty rock, where armies could not follow, and noiselessly and fatally smiting its victim.—The ship, impelled by invisible winds, adopting innumerable courses, braving all dangers—then deceitfully "reposing on her shadow" in port, as if she had never felt the wind, or been tossed upon a wave.—The man secretly desiring, and, undeterred by coldness or repulse, ardently wooing and winning the maid of his choice; and, in the exercise of chastened and holy affections, not only conscious of no guilt, but fully assured of a blessing: these four are the emblems of the adulteress. As the eagle, she on her prey descends; as the serpent she glides, and poisons her victim; as the ship in the storm, she is tossed by passions, yet seems ever in the calm of smiles and blandishments; and, with all the ardour of youthful devotedness seeking the object of its hallowed affections, will she pursue her guilty courses, and, by aid of a hardened conscience, (her substitute for innocence) will she "feast, and wipe her mouth, and say, I have done no wickedness."—And wo to the lamb, when the eagle soars! and wo to the callow bird, when the serpent glides! and wo to the sailor boy who trusts the calm, and never foresees the storm! and wo to the man who yields his peace and salvation to the persevering lures, the deceitful smiles, and the hardened conscience of an adulteress! Col. 3. 5, 6. Heb. 13. 14. Rev. 22. 15.

ECCLESIASTES.

To warn others, Solomon here (1) Represents the vanity and vexation which adhere to all created enjoyments; particularly to those in which men ordinarily look for happiness; as human learning and policy, sensual delights, honour, power, and riches, or an empty profession of religion; chap. i—vi. (2) Prescribes remedies against that vanity and vexation which attend those things; viz. sitting loose to them; enjoying them moderately, but never expecting much from them; acquiescing in the will of God concerning us in every event; remembering God in the days of our youth; and continuing all our life in his fear and service, with an eye to the future judgment; chap. vii—xii. But in both parts the demonstrations of the vanity of things, and the prescriptions of remedies, are somewhat mixed.

[This Book has been frequently represented as "Solomon's penitential discourse, composed a little before his death; in which he recants and laments" his follies and departures from God. From whom, or at what time, this opinion originated in the Christian church, we are unable to say: nor is it of any importance to ascertain its origin. To say the least of it, it is altogether unsupported by any Scriptural authority! It is also unsupported by any traditional Jewish authority. For the Talmudical writers ascribe the book, not to Solomon, but to Hezekiah; Kimchi, to the prophet Isaiah; while Grotius considers it to have been composed by order of Zerubbabel. Jahn refers it to a period posterior to the Babylonish captivity, and Zirkel to the times of Antiochus Epiphanes; and Jerome informs us, that, on account of some imaginary contradictions, the Jews, after the captivity, were averse to receiving it into the canon of Scripture, till more mature consideration convinced them of their error. That Solomon was the author, is apparent from internal evidence; especially from chap. i. 12, 16. ii. 4, 6. & xii. 9, 10. Of the Christian reader we ask specially that, when entering upon the study of it, he would lay aside all pre-conceived and unauthorized opinions about the date and object of the book, and come to examine it in a prayerful and teachable spirit. And this matter is more peculiarly necessary than may at first sight appear: for, as he that views a landscape, through a coloured glass, sees every object tinged with some colour that belongs not to the object, but to the glass; so he that commences the study of this book, under the impression that it is a record of Solomon's personal experience, retractation, and penitence; nay more, a kind of death-bed renunciation of the follies by which his wisdom had been stained, comes with a principle of interpretation that he brings to no other book; that is, an unauthorized determination about what the writer must intend, and not a simple inquiry into the meaning of what he actually says.

In humbly entering upon the interpretation of this book, we therefore cast away every opinion, however current, and however supported, about the date and object of this book; and, by the grace of God, seek to ascertain the mind of the Spirit as revealed in its contents.—ED.]

THE words of the Preacher,* the son of David, king of Jerusalem.

2 Vanity† of vanities, saith the Preacher, vanity of vanities; all is vanity.

3 What profit hath a man of all his labour which he taketh under the sun?

4 ¶ One generation passeth away, and another generation cometh: but the earth abideth for ever.‡

5 The sun also ariseth, and the sun goeth down, and hasteth to his place where he arose.

6 [a] The wind goeth toward the south, and turneth about unto the north; it whirleth about continually, and the wind returneth again according to his circuits.

7 [b] All the rivers run into the sea; yet the sea is not full: unto the place from whence the rivers come, thither they * return again.

8 [c] All things are full of labour; man cannot utter it: the eye is not satisfied with seeing, nor the ear filled with hearing.

9 ¶ [d] The thing that hath been, it is that which shall be; and that which is done, is that which shall be done: and there is no new thing under the sun.†

possessions of great and small cattle above all that were in Jerusalem before me:

8 [e] I gathered me also silver and gold, and the peculiar treasure of kings and of the provinces: [f] I gat me men-singers and women-singers, and the delights of the sons of men, as [g] musical instruments, and that of all sorts. [*]

9 [h] So I was great, and increased more than all that were before me in Jerusalem: also my wisdom remained with me.

10 [i] And whatsoever mine eyes desired I kept not from them; I withheld not my heart from any joy: for my heart rejoiced in all my labour; and this was my portion of all my labour.

11 [k] Then I looked on all the works that my hands had wrought, and on the labour that I had laboured to do; and, behold, all was vanity and vexation of spirit, [†] and there was no profit under the sun.

16 [q] For there is no remembrance of the wise more than of the fool for ever; seeing that which now is, in the days to come shall all be forgotten: and how dieth the wise man? as the fool.

17 [r] Therefore I hated life; [‡] because the work that is wrought under the sun is grievous unto me: [s] for all is vanity and vexation of spirit.

18 ¶ Yea, I hated [t] all my labour which I had [§] taken under the sun; because [u] I should leave it unto the man that shall be after me:

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAP. I.—How feelingly a true penitent, from his own experience, preaches that vanity and vexation which attend created enjoyments! All things indeed in nature concur to manifest this humbling truth, though it is very hard to convince most men of it: for, notwithstanding the perpetual flux, returns, and oblivion, with which created things are marked, we are too apt to be resting in them. Neither our own observation nor experience, nor the dictates of the Spirit of God, are credited by us. Take heed, my soul, never more to esteem or desire them as God; never more depend on, or delight in, them as thy God. If, by all my labours for human knowledge, I can neither satisfy my mind, rectify my nature or lot, nor amend the world, let me study to know Christ and him crucified: thus shall I be changed into the same image from glory to glory. And let this knowledge, which is eternal life, be the chief object of my pursuit.

to a man that hath not laboured therein shall he * leave it for his portion. This also is vanity, and a great evil.

22 For what hath man of all his labour, and of the vexation of his heart, wherein he hath laboured under the sun?

23 For all his days are sorrows, and his travail grief; yea, his heart taketh not rest in the night. This is also vanity.†

24 ¶ There is nothing better for a man, than that he should eat and drink, and that he ‡ should make his soul enjoy good in his labour.§ This also I saw, that it was from the hand of God.

25 For who can eat, or who else can hasten hereunto, more than I?

26 For God giveth to a man that is good ‖ in his sight wisdom, and knowledge, and joy: but to the sinner he giveth travail, to gather, and to heap up, that he may give to him that is good before God. This also is vanity and vexation of spirit.

§ This is no epicurean assertion, insinuation, or objection, as some imagine. There is literally nothing better for a man than thus to eat, drink, and enjoy. (1) There is nothing better for his health and strength of body. (2) There is nothing better for his soul; for if he "enjoy good" in his eating and drinking, both have been "sanctified by the word and prayer;" (1 Tim. 4. 5.) and both he has used to the "glory of God," doing "all in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ." (1 Cor. 10. 31.) But are not immortality and glory better? (Rom. 2. 7.) Yes, yes, undoubtedly; but immortality and glory are not "under the sun," the limit of this life and world, to which Solomon's inquiry is here confined. See chap. 1. 3. & 2. 3, 11, 18, 20, 22.—Ed.

§ How few seem to know or care about their immortal spirits!—Ed.

‖ True joy in a man's own works, lies (1) In the humble acknowledgment that he is "an unprofitable servant," (Luke 17 10,) for joy ariseth not from a proud assertion of merit. (2) In discovering that while his own works produce no righteousness, a believer is "justified without the deeds of the law." (Rom. 3. 28.) (3) In finding that, in all he has wrought, not he, but grace, has been the real worker. 1 Cor. 15. 10.—Ed.

TO every thing there is a season, and a time to every purpose * under the heaven:

2 A time to be born, and a time to die: a time to plant, and a time to pluck up that which is planted:†

3 A time to kill, and a time to heal: a time to break down, and a time to build up:

4 A time to weep, and a time to laugh: a time to mourn, and a time to dance:

5 A time to cast away stones, and a time to gather stones together:‡ a time to embrace, and a time to refrain from embracing:

6 A time to get, and a time to lose: a time to keep, and a time to cast away:

7 A time to rend,§ and a time to sew: a time to keep silence, and a time to speak:

8 A time to love, and a time to hate: a time of war, and a time of peace.

9 What profit hath he that worketh in that wherein he laboureth?

A. M. cir. 3029. B. C. cir. 975.

* "A time for every purpose," unfavourable as well as favourable to the man that thinks to get profit of his labour; that is, solid, abiding satisfaction, which he can call, and keep, as his own: the one stands at all times over against the other. Eccl. 7. 14.—Ed.

† Among the horrors of war is the destruction of woods. A great man who had been at much pains to ornament a wild mountain district with buildings and trees, exclaimed when all had been destroyed, "I care nothing for the house—I can soon raise a new one; but the trees! the trees! when will they be grown again!—Note. How grateful should a people be when a land continues to enjoy peace, and advance in improvement! This also is of God.—Ed.

‡ It may well imply a time to clear a field for husbandry, and collect the stones again for building.—Ed.

§ To rend a garment in sorrow, as was customary with the Jews.—Ed.

10 I have seen the travail, which God hath given to the sons of men to be exercised in it.*

11 ¶ He hath made every thing beautiful† in his time: also he hath set the world‡ in their heart, so that no man can find out the work that God maketh from the beginning to the end.

12 ¶ I know that there is no good in them, but for a man to rejoice, and to do good in his life.

13 And also that every man should eat and drink, and enjoy the good of all his labour, it is the gift of God.§

14 I know that whatsoever God doeth, it shall be for ever: nothing can be put to it, nor any thing taken from it: and God doeth it, that men should fear before him.

15 That which hath been is now; and that which is to be hath already been; and God requireth ‖ that which is past.

16 ¶ And, moreover, I saw under the sun the place of judgment, that wickedness was there; and the place of righteousness, that iniquity was there.

17 I said in mine heart, God shall judge the righteous and the wicked:* for there is a time there for every purpose, and for every work.

18 ¶ I said in mine heart concerning the estate of the sons of men, a that God might manifest them, and that they might see that they themselves are beasts.

19 For that which befalleth the sons of men befalleth beasts; even one thing befalleth them: as the one dieth, so dieth the other; yea, they have all one breath; so that a man hath no pre-eminence† above a beast: for all is vanity.

20 All go unto one place; all are of the dust, and all turn to dust again.

21 ¶ Who knoweth the spirit ‡ of man that goeth upward,§ and the spirit of the beast that goeth downward to the earth?

22 ¶ Wherefore I perceive that there is nothing better, than that a man should rejoice in his own works;‖ for that is his portion: for who shall bring him to see what shall be after him?

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAP. II.—Numerous are the contrivances of men to find that in creatures, which they should seek, and can only find, in God himself. But how vain and vexing are their diversified, their unnumbered, their utmost attempts! Till our souls return to God in Christ, as our ALL and IN ALL, they will be always like birds wandering from their nests. Thrice happy are they to whom God gives grace to take all things from him; to enjoy him in all things, and all things in him; and to use all things for his glory, and as means of attaching their heart to him and his ways.

EXPLANATORY NOTES. CHAP. III.—Ver. 1—11. However disjointed, useless, and afflictive the events of Providence may appear to us, God has connected them together in the most amazing beauty and harmony, and orders the season of each as tends most to advance his glory and the good of his people. And whatever worldly wisdom men may have, they will never be capable of comprehending the astonishing extent of the mysteries which God exhibits to their view in his works of creation and providence. 12, 13. It is therefore best in itself, and a benefit from God, to use worldly enjoyments moderately, and to improve them for the advantage of others. 14. God, in his purpose and providence, so fixes men's lot, that none can make it otherwise; and therefore we ought not to quarrel with, but kindly submit to, his pleasure. 15. In every age, God, by new returns of things, governs the world with great uniformity of appearances. 16, 17. The very power which he has bestowed upon men, as a remedy for grievances, is often used to oppress and injure the innocent; and therefore there must be a future general judgment by God himself, in which all things shall be rectified, by clearing the innocent, rewarding the righteous, and condemning the wicked. 18—21. Affected with these views, I wished that God would make men, particularly those who haughtily oppress others, to consider how mean and brutish they are, and to ponder the nature of that immortal soul which chiefly distinguishes them from beasts, whose life entirely vanishes in death.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAP. III.—We live in a world of changes; but all of them fixed by the unchangeable purpose of God. It is absurd then to choose it for our portion, or to take up our rest in it. Readily should we believe, that whatever God has given us is best for us, accommodate ourselves to it, and wait with patience for the full unravelling of what seems intricate and perplexed. Yea, to be entirely satisfied with God's providential disposals is highly necessary, as they neither can nor need be altered. And let us study to answer his end in his providences, which is to make us truly religious. Amidst all the changes which we either feel or fear, let us believe and acknowledge the inviolable steadiness of his government. Let us con-

CHAPTER IV.

(1) Vanity exemplified in oppression, envy, idleness, covetousness, seclusion from society, and self-will.

SO I returned, and considered all the oppressions that are done under the sun: and behold the tears of such as were oppressed, and they had no comforter; and on the [a] side of their oppressors there was power, but they had no comforter.[†]

2 Wherefore I praised the dead which are already dead more than the living which are yet alive.

3 [a] Yea, better is he than both they which hath not yet been, who hath not seen the evil work that is done under the sun.

4 ¶ Again, I considered all travail, and [‡] every right work, that [§] for this a man is envied of his neighbour. This is also vanity and vexation of spirit.

5 ¶ The fool foldeth his hands together, and eateth his own flesh.

6 ¶ [b] Better is an handful with quietness, than both the hands full with travail and vexation of spirit.

7 ¶ Then I returned, and I saw vanity under the sun.

8 There is one alone, and there is not a second; yea, he hath neither child nor brother: yet is there no end of all his labour; neither is his eye satisfied with riches; neither saith he, For whom do I labour, and bereave my soul of good? This is also vanity, yea, it is a sore travail.

9 ¶ Two are better than one; because they have a good reward for their labour.[‖]

10 For if they fall, the one will lift up his fellow: but wo to him that is alone when he falleth; for he hath not another to help him up.

11 Again, [c] if two lie together, then they have heat: but how can one be warm alone?

12 And if one prevail against him, two shall withstand him; and [d] a threefold cord is not quickly broken.

13 ¶ Better is a poor and a wise child than an old and foolish king, [•] who will no more be admonished.[•]

14 [f] For out of prison he cometh to reign; whereas also he that is born in his kingdom becometh poor.

15 I considered all the living which walk under the sun, with the second child[†] that shall stand up in his stead.

† From viewing the various works and judgment-seats of men, and the common graves of all living things, "I returned" to examine the oppressions produced in these works, and legalised by the imperfect administration of human justice; and I found the oppressed and the oppressor alike comfortless.—Note. The books of Judges, of Kings, and of the Prophets, abundantly testify, that when a people are oppressed, it is by God's judgments upon their sins; while the examples of Pharaoh, Jeroboam, Belshazzar, and others, equally testify that the oppressor is judicially given over to his own ways, that he, in his turn, may become a warning to others in power.—Ed.

KEEP [a] thy foot[•] when thou goest to the house of God, and be more ready to hear [b] than to give the sacrifice of fools: for they consider not that they do evil.

2 [c] Be not rash with thy mouth, and let not thine heart be hasty to utter any [†] thing before God: for God is in heaven,[‡] and thou upon earth; therefore let thy words [d] be few.

3 For a dream cometh through the multitude of business; and [e] a fool's voice is known by multitude of words.[§]

4 [f] When thou vowest a vow unto God, defer not to pay it; for he hath no pleasure in fools: pay that which thou hast vowed.

5 [g] Better is it that thou shouldest not vow, than that thou shouldest vow and not pay.

6 [h] Suffer not thy mouth to cause thy flesh to sin; [‖] neither say thou before [i] the angel,[•] that it was an error: wherefore should God be angry at thy voice, and [k] destroy the work of thine hands?

7 [l] For in the multitude of dreams and many words there are also divers vanities:[†] [m] but fear thou God.

8 ¶ [n] If thou seest the oppression of the poor, and violent perverting of judgment and justice in a province, marvel not [‡] at the matter: for he that is higher than the highest regardeth; and there be higher than they.

9 ¶ [•] Moreover, the profit of the earth is for all: [§] the king himself is served by the field.

10 He that loveth silver shall not be satisfied with silver; nor he that loveth abundance with increase. This is also vanity.

11 [p] When goods increase, they are increased that eat them: [q] and what good is there to the owners thereof, saving the beholding of them with their eyes?

12 [r] The sleep of a labouring man is sweet, whether he eat little or much: but the abundance of the rich will not suffer him to sleep.

13 [s] There is a sore evil which I have seen under the sun, namely, riches kept for the owners thereof to their hurt.

stantly live in the faith of his future judgment of the world, that no oppression may sink our spirits, and no power nor honour render us proud, mischievous, or impious. Let us always maintain a deep sense of our own meanness, stupidity, and unruliness before God; and study to use whatever God gives us for our own comfort, and for the real benefit of others.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAP. IV.—Into what a hell hath sin turned our earth! Men are often proud of transforming themselves into devils, for tormenting their brethren. Often, through want of help and comfort, a man's life is made worse than death or non-existence. And desperately wicked are men when even right and useful works do but rouse their envy. But great is the mercy that God, with whom every right work is accepted, will be our final Judge. Let me then be diligent in business, and work the work of God while it is called to-day. Sloth of any kind tends to make men poor and miserable. But unhappy are they who are selfish and covetous; and who, without any temptation, deny themselves the comforts of life, and make themselves slaves to business. It is absurd to covet all to themselves, when friendship and social connexions are much more calculated to their help, comfort, and improvement. Kings are often but a plague to themselves and their restless people; and tottering honours are rather burdens than advantages.

14 But those riches perish by evil travail:* and he begetteth a son, and there is nothing in his hand.

Job 3. 5.—Ed.

Reflections upon Chap. V.—Fearfully are men subjected to vanity; it enters not only into all their outward possessions, but even into their worship! Great need have we to take heed to our hearts, to our lips, and to our whole behaviour, in our religious performances, that they may not become means of dishonouring God and destroying ourselves. But, alas! often are they performed in a foolish and inconsiderate manner, our minds being no more serious in them than in an idle dream; and vows are often rashly made, and no less readily broken, in the view of Jesus and his angels and ministers. Very necessary is the constant faith and deep impression of God's greatness and omniscience, and the future judgment, to make us serious and circumspect in our worship, and for enabling us to behold, or bear up under, oppression and persecution. God makes the highest to live on the same simple things as the poorest. There is very little to profit or please, and much more to hurt and vex, in riches, than we commonly think. The rich man's servant often enjoys more benefit by his wealth, than the rich man himself, while he suffers none of the vexation! Nay, the covetous miser gets no comfort in his wealth, and it is swept away, so that his children never come to the possession of it. Much happier is he who receives whatever he has as God's free gift, and uses it to his glory. Little is he concerned at the evils which befall him in life when God favours him with solid comfort.

Chap. VI.—Ver. 7, 8. Whatever wealth men gain by their labour is only available for meat, drink, or the like; but can never satisfy their soul, or even their avarice. And, in respect to sensual gratification, fools may be as happy as the wisest; and even a poor man, who has common sense and prudence, may, by his industry render himself and family as happy as the richest. 9, 10. A comfortable enjoyment of that which we have is far preferable to an insatiable desire and restless pursuit after that which we have not.—And, let our condition be what it may on earth, we shall still remain poor frail creatures, subject to manifold miseries: and it will be the utmost wickedness and madness to complain of our lot, or strive with God to get it rectified.

Reflections upon Chap. VI.—Men's riches are often a remarkable curse to them, and render them really more unhappy than the poorest. It is wretched to have wealth, and yet no heart to use it for our necessary accommodations in life. And empty are all earthly enjoyments, which can afford no satisfaction to a soul. How unhappy do some men make themselves by the insatiable nature of their own lusts! And yet it is very hard to draw them from a sinful attachment to earthly things, or to persuade them to use them aright; and especially to bring them to receive the almighty Saviour, and his unsearchable riches, for their everlasting treasure and portion.

Chap. VII.—Ver. 1. A good reputation is of more advantage for rendering us useful and happy, than all the riches, pleasures, and honours of this world: and the day of death, which frees men from the miseries of this world, is preferable to the day of birth, which introduces into a life in which the enjoyments do not sufficiently balance the evils of it. 2—6. It is far safer and more profitable, to attend occasions of mourning and faithful reproof, which conduce to make men thoughtful of death and eternity, and render them wise unto salvation, than of revelling, mirth, and folly, which seduce men into heedless dissipation. 7. Grievous oppression will provoke even wise men to unseemly rage and behaviour; and bribes received will corrupt the judgment and pervert the affections of the best. 8. We ought more to regard how a thing turns out at last, than what promising appearances it has at first. 10. In bewailing the evils of our times, we ought carefully to avoid all murmuring at the dispensations of Providence, as if they were not equal. 11. When rich men are truly wise, they may do much good to others with their wealth in this world; 12. For both wisdom and wealth may be laid out for our protection and safety; but it is true piety and prudence that promote spiritual comfort and eternal happiness. 13, 14. To prevent murmuring, we ought carefully to observe how wise, just, and powerful God's operations are, and consider ourselves incapable of changing, even the most afflictive events of providence, to our liking. In the time of prosperity we should therefore acknowledge God's goodness, and enjoy the benefit of it; and in the day of adversity we ought to consider the nature, author, and end of our afflictions, so as to make a good use of them: for God has disposed them in such variety, that none might be able to foresee future events in his particular lot. 15. I have often observed the most pious men sorely afflicted, and apparently miserable, in this world; and the most wicked long enjoy an outward prosperity. 16—18. It is therefore necessary that men should avoid all needless scrupulosity and rash zeal, not warranted by God's word, lest it bring them into unnecessary troubles;—and especially should we avoid, with the utmost care, presumptuous sinning, lest, however he bear with others, it should provoke God quickly to cut us off, and send us to hell in our wickedness.—It is of great use to receive heartily, and practise carefully, this advice: for it is the true fearer of God, who, by a circumspect regard to his law, shall escape both the extremes and their evil consequences. 19, 20. True piety and prudence tend more to direct, help, and protect men, than all human helps; even though the best are liable to manifold failings.——24. Human wisdom may judge of things present and obvious, but not of things future and mysterious. 25. I attempted a most careful and comprehensive search into God's providences, and men's counsels, conduct, and sinfulness; 26. And, with grief and shame, I find that nothing more effectually entices and fixes men in guilt and ruin than a whorish woman. It is only by the remarkable mercy of God, and the most earnest and watchful piety, that one can either avoid or escape from her temptations; and often God permits those, who have otherwise offendod him, to be ruined by her influence. 27, 28. Here and there a truly honest man may be found among my courtiers: but a modest, plain-hearted, humble, and sincere woman, have I not found among all my thousand wives and concubines.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAP. VII.—A truly good character is very valuable; and ought to be sought for and maintained with the greatest care. Happy is the death of those who die in the Lord! Let us then live much in the serious consideration of our last end. Christian reproofs are highly requisite to make or keep us grave and serious, amidst so much folly and so many flashes of vain mirth as take place in the world. The very worst of things effectually work for the good of the saints. And a humble and patient resignation to the will of God makes us easy under the most grievous adversity and oppression. Christian wisdom and prudence tend greatly to our direction, safety, happiness, and strength.—They teach us to view God's hand in all that befalls us; to accommodate ourselves to every providence as it comes; and neither to be offended with the prosperity of the wicked, nor the adversity of the godly, in this life; to guard against all extremes: and under a deep sense of our own faults, to carry ourselves mildly toward others who are overtaken in a fault. How short-sighted are the wisest of mortals with respect to the most important objects! But great is the mercy if they are brought to see their own leading follies and crimes, and, by the sight thereof, are led to repentance, to a deep sense of the riches of God's grace, and to search out the sinfulness of their heart and nature, till they apprehend themselves utterly vile before God.

WHO is as the wise man? and who knoweth the interpretation of a thing? A man's wisdom maketh his face to shine,[a] and the boldness[†] of his face shall be changed.

2 ¶ I counsel thee to keep the king's commandment, and that in regard of the oath of God.

3 Be not hasty to go out of his sight: stand not in an evil thing; for he doeth whatsoever pleaseth him.

4 Where the word of a king is, there is power; and who may say unto him, What doest thou?

5 Whoso keepeth the commandment shall feel no evil thing;[‡] and a wise man's heart discerneth both time and judgment.

6 ¶ Because to every purpose there is time and judgment, therefore the misery of man is great upon him.[§]

7 For he knoweth not that which shall be: for who can tell him when it shall be?

8 ¶ There is no man that hath power over the spirit to retain the spirit; neither hath he power in the day of death: and there is no discharge in that war;[‖] neither shall wickedness deliver those that are given to it.

9 All this have I seen, and applied my heart unto every work that is done under the sun: there is a time wherein one man ruleth over another to his own hurt.[*]

10 And so I saw the wicked buried, who had come and gone from the place of the holy,[†] and they were forgotten in the city where they had so done. This is also vanity.

11 ¶ Because sentence against an evil work is not executed speedily, therefore the heart of the sons of men is fully set in them to do evil.

12 ¶ Though a sinner do evil an hundred times, and his days be prolonged, yet surely I know that it shall be well with them that fear God, which fear before him:

13 But it shall not be well with the wicked, neither shall he prolong his days, which are as a shadow; because he feareth not before God.

14 There is a vanity which is done upon the earth; that there be just men, unto whom it happeneth according to the [a] work of the wicked: again, there be wicked men, to whom it happeneth according to the [b] work of the righteous.[†] I said, that this also is vanity.

15 ¶ [c] Then I commended mirth, because a man hath no better thing under the sun, than [d] to eat, and to drink, and to be merry; for that shall abide with him of his labour the days of his life, which God giveth him under the sun.[‡]

16 ¶ [e] When I applied mine heart to know wisdom, and to see the business that is done upon the earth; (for [f] also there is that neither day nor night seeth sleep with his eyes;)[§]

17 Then I beheld all the work of God, that a man cannot find out the work that is done under the sun; because though a man labour to seek it out, yet he shall not find it: yea farther, though a wise man think to know it, yet shall he not be able to find it.

[‡] That "the king" was a title of Messiah, familiar in the days of Solomon, is obvious from Ps. 2. 6. & 21. 1, 4, 6. & 45. 1, 6. & 98. 6. &c.; and there are such characteristics in this passage as clearly prove that Jesus is "the King" whom Solomon prophetically honours. Thus in verse 3, "He doeth whatsoever pleaseth him." Now this neither David, nor Solomon, nor Darius, (Dan. 6. 14.) nor, indeed, the most despotic monarch on earth ever could effect: then, to Solomon's King none may say, "What doest thou?" But never was there an earthly king without some one honest enough, or bold enough, or factious enough, to question his acts. Above all, he who keepeth the commandment of Solomon's King, "shall feel no evil," a lot which no earthly king enjoys himself, nor can bestow upon any of his subjects. But all these things the King in Zion can do, and all these blessings his subjects enjoy.—Ed.

[§] "The misery of man," who will not wisely seek to discover the will of God, and discern the signs of providence, (see ver. 5.) is great upon him."—Ed.

[‖] The war with disease and death.—Ed.

[*] This hurt arises (1) From the mental perturbation that every ungodly and unkind superior must experience. (2) From that human retaliation which the injustice of despotic rule so often provokes. (3) From these judgments which an all-wise and merciful God who suffers long, does yet in justice finally bring down upon the wicked.—Ed.

[d] 1 Cor. 10. 31.

[‡] This is no libertine insinuation, as some imagine, but, when scripturally interpreted, a plain statement of an important truth. There is no doubt a "laughter of fools," and "the end of that mirth is heaviness;" (Prov. 14. 13.) but there is also a mirth which forms an essential or concomitant part of God's worship, (Ps. 100. 1, 2 Neh. 8. 6, 9—12. Jam. 5. 13.) and it is of that mirth, with the thankful and temperate use of what men "eat or drink," that Solomon here speaks.—Ed.

FOR all this I considered in my heart, even to declare all this, that the righteous, and the wise, and their works, are in the hand of God: no man knoweth either love or hatred[*] by all that is before them.

2 All things come alike to all: there is one event[†] to the righteous, and to the wicked; to the good, and to the clean, and to the unclean; to him that sacrificeth, and to him that sacrificeth not: as is the good, so is the sinner; and he that sweareth, as he that feareth an oath.

[*] No man can tell from prosperity that God loves him, nor from adversity that God hates him. Yet, let no one ignorantly say, we have then no means of ascertaining whether God loves us or not. No one can so imagine when he reads John 14. 23. 1 John 3. 13, 19, 21. & 4. 13, 16.—Ed.

[†] The "one event" that is common to all is death; (see last clause of ver. 3.) and "this evil under the sun" exists as a perpetual memorial of the fall of man, an awful warning of "the judgment to come"—a dungeon of darkness (sorrow) to the wicked, and a door of hope and joy to the children of God.—Ed.

CHAP. VIII.—Ver. 1. How few are truly wise, and can rightly take up or expound the words or works of God? And yet it is wisdom that renders a man truly honourable, mild, and majestic. 2. The laws of a king ought to be obeyed, not only from fear of the penalty, but from regard to God, whose deputy he is, and to the oath of allegiance sworn to him by the name, and in the presence of God, as witness and guardian of it. 3. We must behave ourselves submissively; and never, through passion or discontent, withdraw from his service, or cast off our allegiance; for, his power being so great, it is very dangerous to contend with him. 4. A king has power to enforce his commands; and none can oppose him without apparent danger. 5. He who prudently complies with the king's pleasure in lawful things, shall avoid the trouble and danger which he would otherwise incur. And it will require wisdom to direct in what time and manner we may deal with him to the best advantage. 6. For, through inattention to the proper time, and to proper direction in managing matters, men bring much trouble upon themselves: 7. For they are generally ignorant what things are to happen, and of the time in which what they expect will come to pass. 8. None, neither by force nor entreaty, nor by wickedness, are capable of preventing the removal of their soul from this world, in God's appointed time, and by his appointed means. 9. I have observed that rulers, by their management, often bring guilt and ruin upon themselves. 10. I have observed wicked rulers, notwithstanding the greatest funeral pomp, quickly forgotten in the very city in which they had often, in God's name, administered judgment. So vain and perishing are all the pomp and power of the greatest. 11. Because God in mercy sometimes delays to punish open transgressors of his law, hardened sinners, in a most presumptuous manner, abandon themselves to all manner of mischief and wickedness. 12. But though the sinner's days of reprieve, or even of prosperity, should be prolonged for a time, yet it is only they who truly fear God, and walk in his ways, that will be happy at last. 13. Wicked despisers of God shall not enjoy the true comforts of life, and shall be quickly hurried into misery here or hereafter. 14. It is, however, afflicting that some eminent saints are reproached, persecuted, and distressed in this world, while some ringleaders in wickedness meet with kind usage and remarkable prosperity. 15. This makes it evident, that nothing is more proper than soberly and thankfully to enjoy what God in his providence bestows upon us in this world, as all the reward that we can gain by our labour. 16, 17. It is best to refrain from curious inquiries into the reasons, ends, and meaning of God's dispensations; for, after the most diligent, curious, and persevering search, I find they will still remain unsearchable to men.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAP. VIII.—What excellency in himself—usefulness among neighbours—honour among friends—and courage among enemies—the true knowledge and fear of God give to a man! But it is foolish and sinful to disregard the laws of our rulers; to be forward in finding fault with their administrations; to persist in faults pointed out to us; or to neglect proper methods of obtaining redress of our grievances. Subjection to magistrates is highly necessary, not only for conscience' sake, but even for avoiding their wrath and securing our own comfort. Certain and irresistible in themselves, though uncertain in their circumstances, are troubles and death to sinful men. But when we see wicked men prosper, while the godly are oppressed, there is need of patience, and of looking by faith to the unto all; yea, also the heart of the sons of men is full of evil, and madness is in their heart while they live, and after that they go to the dead.

4 ¶ For to him that is joined to all the living there is hope: for a living dog is better than a dead lion.*

5 For the living know that they shall die: but the dead know not any thing,† neither have they any more a reward; for the memory of them is forgotten.‡

6 Also their love, and their hatred, and their envy, is now perished; neither have they any more a portion for ever in any thing that is done under the sun.

7 ¶ Go thy way, eat thy bread with joy,§ and drink thy wine with a merry heart;‖ for God now accepteth thy works.*

8 Let thy garments be always white;† and let thy head lack no ointment.

9 ‡ Live joyfully with the wife whom thou lovest all the days of the life of thy vanity, which he hath given thee under the sun, all the days of thy vanity: for that is thy portion in this life, and in thy labour which thou takest under the sun.

10 Whatsoever thy hand findeth to do, do it with thy might; for there is no work, nor device, nor knowledge, nor wisdom, in the grave, whither thou goest.

11 ¶ [a] I returned, and saw under the sun, that the race is not to the swift, nor the battle to the strong, neither yet bread to the wise, nor yet riches to men of understanding, nor yet favour to men of skill; but time and chance§ happeneth to them all.

12 For man also knoweth not his time: as the fishes that are taken in an evil net, and as the birds that are caught in the snare; so are the sons of men snared in an evil time, when it falleth suddenly upon them.

13 ¶ This wisdom have I seen also under the sun, and it seemed great unto me:

14 [b] There was a little city, and few men within it; and there came a great king against it, and besieged it, and built great bulwarks against it:

15 Now there was found in it a poor wise man, and he by his wisdom delivered the city; yet no man remembered that same poor man.*

16 [c] Then said I, Wisdom is better than strength: nevertheless the poor man's wisdom is despised, and his words are not heard.†

17 [d] The words of wise men are heard in quiet more than the cry of him that ruleth among fools.

18 *Wisdom is better than weapons of war: but [f] one sinner‡ destroyeth much good.

* The "dead lion" was the guardian emblem of the throne of Solomon, (2 Chr. 9. 18. 19.) and although "the like were not made in any kingdom," yet "a living dog," though an unclean and despised animal, would by his mere barking or assault, have done more to guard the monarch than the twelve dead lions by which the ascent of Solomon's throne was protected.—Ed.

† The bodies only are dead; and they, literally, know not anything.—Ed.

‡ Is this consistent with fact? Is the memory of a great man ever forgotten? Yes, always. The memory of a good or a bad man's actions may be preserved in history, and trumpeted by fame; but the memory of every man—the memory of personal affection—the only real memory of the man—is altogether forgotten—his children cease to weep for him—and his grandchildren, perhaps, knew him not.—Ed.

unseen, the eternal issue of things! and, in the meanwhile, to make the best use we can of what we meet with, and leave it to the Lord to comprehend, and manage His own mysterious works.

Reflections upon Chap. IX.—It is a great mercy for the saints, that they, and all their works, are in the hand and under the influence of God, their reconciled Father. Yet how often does he use them with as much severity in this world as if they were the most profligate sinners! Great is the mercy that there is an eternity at hand, when Providence so little distinguishes the righteous here in their condition, either in life or in death. Remarkable are the advantages which men have in this life for bettering their states, tempers, or hopes. But quickly death puts an end to them all! to all opportunities of preparing for eternity; and to all our intimacies, enjoyments, or affections, in this world. What need then have we soberly to relish the comforts of this life, relative to our spirits, our food, our raiment, and our relations. Quickly should we work out our salvation with fear and trembling, while we have opportunity, as we know not how soon our soul may be required of us. Carefully should we acknowledge God, and depend on him for direction in all our paths, as without his assistance we can obtain nothing good, but must fall into misery and ruin. Yet how stupid are most men, who neither regard wisdom itself, nor those who thereby do them the greatest services! It is necessary that we should always act from regard to the authority of God, and from a principle of love, as men may perhaps disregard the best works that we can do for them. But much more useful are wise discourses than all the noisy harangues which fools admire. And even one impenitent and presumptuous sinner is often a great plague to a family, a church, or nation.

Chap. X.—Ver. 1. A little imprudence or wickedness much hurts the character of one who has been reckoned uncommonly wise. 2. A wise man's understanding, and inward abilities, are always in readiness to direct him in his work: but a fool is unready in all he does, and knows not how to manage his affairs. 3. Nay, even in the most ordinary business, his weakness appears, and he plainly discovers his folly to every one. 4. If the magistrate takes offence at thee, never desert thy station or employment, or withdraw thy subjection: but, by submissive and patient carriage, endeavour to pacify him. 5—7. Very often, to the great hurt of the subjects, magistrates employ, as their deputies and agents, persons of a weak or mercenary spirit, while persons of ability and true dignity are overlooked and contemned. 8. Both prince and people have need to beware of innovations; for he that endeavours to insnare and ruin another shall thereby perish himself: and he that passes his due bounds to wrong others, brings unexpected mischief upon himself. 9. He that rashly attempts things too high and hard for him shall be hurt by it; and he that deals with men of stubborn tempers endangers himself. 10. If a man do not use proper means for his work, it will cost him so much more labour and pains.

14 A fool also is full of words: a man cannot tell what shall be; and what shall be after him, who can tell him?

* This translation is founded on the general opinion of "serpent-charming," by music being a reality, and not a juggling imposition: a matter still undecided. ‡ Solomon warns against an uncharitable thought, because it would soon break out into a voice, and certainly be discovered. * Some interpret thus: "Cast thy bread-corn (seed) upon the waters," as rice is said to be sown in Egypt; others, "Sow thy bread-corn (seed) before the coming of the waters," that is, before the rainy season. But as the word translated waters signifies multitudes, may not the meaning rather be "Cast thy bread (give forth thy spiritual instruction) before the face of the multitudes?" See Mat. 5. 1. as contrasted with the portions or more specific instructions prescribed in the second verse?—Ed.

† Give the due portion of bread (specific scriptural and spiritual instruction) to individuals; for thou knowest not what poison of error may unexpectedly arise, against which sound scriptural instruction is the only antidote.—Ed.

‡ The clouds of heaven water alike the desert and the garden, obeying chemical laws: and if a tree fall toward north or south, there it abides, obeying mechanical laws; how surely then should the intellectual and spiritual man obey the laws of his condition, and fulfil these beneficent purposes for which God has endowed him?—Ed.

§ Heb. shall be right.

‖ This is no irony, as some have imagined: it is a simple and beautiful lesson. "Rejoice in thy youth;" not in thy follies and lusts. (2 Tim. 2. 22.) "Let thy heart,"—thine own conscience, and not vain companions—"cheer thee" in thy course. "And walk in the ways of thine heart"—thy conscience—not in the way of evil advisers —"and in the sight of thine eyes;" not in the darkness of them that close their eyes, lest they should see. (Mat. 13. 15.) "And know thou, God will bring thee into judgment"—the judgment, not of condemnation, but of "Well done good and faithful servant." Mat. 25. 23. —Ed.

2 Give a portion to seven, and also to eight; † for thou knowest not what evil shall be upon the earth.

3 If the clouds be full of rain, they empty themselves upon the earth: and if the tree fall toward the south, or toward the north; in the place where the tree falleth, there it shall be. ‡

4 He that observeth the wind shall not sow; and he that regardeth the clouds shall not reap.

5 As thou knowest not what is the way of the spirit, nor how the bones do grow in the womb of her that is with child; even so thou knowest not the works of God who maketh all.

6 In the morning sow thy seed, and in the evening withhold not thine hand: for thou knowest not whether § shall prosper, either this or that, or whether they both shall be alike good.

7 ¶ Truly the light is sweet, and a pleasant thing it is for the eyes to behold the sun:

8 But if a man live many years, and rejoice in them all; yet let him remember the days of darkness, for they shall be many. All that cometh is vanity.

9 ¶ Rejoice, O young man, in thy youth, ‖ and let thy heart cheer thee in the days of thy youth, and walk in the ways of thine heart, and in the sight of thine eyes: but know thou, that for all these things God will bring thee into judgment.

10 Therefore remove * sorrow from thy heart, and put away evil from thy flesh: for childhood and youth are vanity.

Wisdom is therefore necessary and profitable to direct in the choice and use of means. 11. As unenchanted serpents are disposed to bite, so rash and talkative persons are sure to do mischief with their words, unless they be wisely prevented. 12. Wise men's words being pious, friendly, and profitable, procure them favour: but foolish, slanderous, and sinful speeches, suddenly and irrecoverably ruin a man. 13. A fool at the first talks in a useless and impertinent manner; and at length he grows insolent and abusive, sticking at nothing wicked or malicious. 14. A fool pours forth his incoherent babblings, and pretends to know everything secret or future; and no one can tell what he will say next, or what mischief his foolish speeches may produce. 15. Fools find their work tedious and wearisome, because they want sense and prudence to manage the most ordinary business, even where the rules are ever so plain. 16. It is a great misery to a nation when their magistrates are ignorant, wilful, and unexperienced, and minding their sensual pleasures when they should be employed about the business of their office. 17. But happy is that nation whose magistrates are of truly excellent dispositions and endowments, and who use the enjoyments of life, not to satisfy inordinate lusts, but to fit them for their business. 18. Through sloth and indolence, estates, families, and nations, are gradually reduced to wretchedness and ruin. 19. Even feasting affords but a very slight and transient pleasure; but a plentiful estate procures every outward advantage: we should therefore beware of spending it in luxury. 20. It is neither lawful nor safe to contemn, reproach, or wish evil to magistrates, however secretly, as it may be very quickly and surprisingly discovered to them.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAP. X.—Men of character have need to be careful, lest they should inadvertently ruin it. Many are extremely ill qualified for the business they take in hand; and imprudently expose their own folly and wickedness. But it is very dangerous when either rulers or subjects leave their proper stations, and attempt violent changes of the public settlement. Vain and imprudent talking is often attended with the most hurtful consequences. It is necessary then to have our words always with grace, seasoned with salt. An imprudent management of their business frequently robs men of both the comfort and the benefit thereof. But it is a great mercy for nations when rulers and subjects do all diligently and prudently attend to their proper work, and act according to their station, neither doing nor speaking evil, but provoking one another to love and to good works.

CHAP. XI.—Ver. 1, 2. Cheerfully lay out thyself to bestow the necessaries of life upon the poor, who are entirely unable to requite thee; and so God shall plentifully reward thee for it in this life, or in that which is to come. And however great the number of needy objects be, bestow that which is necessary upon them all, according to thine utmost ability; for the opportunity of liberality may soon be lost to thee, and an evil time may quickly come, in which thou wilt infinitely need God to be the supplier of thy own wants. 3, 4. He bestows plenty upon men, in order that with it they may do good to others. And however undeserving the objects be on whom they religiously bestow their charity, they shall not lose their reward.—They that withhold it till every objection be answered, will never bestow it. 5, 6. As thou knowest not how the human soul is created or united to the body, or operates in and on it, nay, nor even how the child is formed in the womb, even so thou knowest not how God may deal with thee, or thy estate: and therefore neglect no opportunity of doing or receiving good; and without any curious prying into futurity, leave it entirely to God to recompense thee. 7, 8. Life and its comforts are desirable: but, let men enjoy created comforts as long as they may, the lasting period of troubles, death, and eternity, will infallibly succeed, and manifest the emptiness and insufficiency of all outward enjoyments. 9, 10. Whatever temptations young persons may have to indulge their own foolish and wicked inclinations and fancies, let them remember, with the deepest concern, that God will, in his awful judgment, call them to account for every part of their conduct. Let them take care to prevent those perplexities and miseries which sinful indulgence will at last bring upon them; for all the empty and short-lived pleasures of youth can never in the least balance the dangers of inexpressible and everlasting misery.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAP. XI.—What a plain, profitable, and important duty is that of giving to the poor! Nothing is a more certain mean of making men rich. No objections, drawn from our right to what we have, from the narrowness of our circumstances, from the discouragements which we have already met with in it, or from our not knowing how it can be made up to us, ought to make us neglect so much as one opportunity of charity. But, above all, it is most sinful and foolish for either old or young to indulge their lusts, and live unconcerned about Jesus Christ and his salvation, when heavy troubles, an important death, an awful judgment, and an endless eternity, are before them, and they know not how near!

CHAP. XII.—Ver. 1. Now, in youth, seriously think of, believe in, and serve the Divine Persons, who made, preserve, and redeem men, before the disquieting and disqualifying infirmities of old age come upon you: 2. Before the comforts of life, which render it agreeable, be withdrawn, and the powers of your mind, and senses of your body, be rendered almost useless, and the calamities of old age rise successively one after another: 3. When your head, arms, and hands shall shake, through weakness or palsy; your once strong shoulders stoop, and your legs and thighs bow under their weight; your teeth be generally lost, and your eyes sunk in their sockets and become dim; 4. Before your lips be but a little opened to eat or talk, because of the loss or looseness of teeth; before you be incapable to walk in the streets; your rest broken, and every little noise awaken you; your lungs fail, your voice become inharmonious and harsh, and your ears dull and regardless of music; 5. Before you, unable to climb, become afraid to mount or move on high, nay, are afraid of falling in the common way; before your hair become white; the least noise or weight become burdensome, and the lightest food load your stomach; and there be no inclination to, or delight in, former pleasures, because you draw nigh to the grave and the other world, when your friends shall lament their loss, and the hired mourners publicly pour forth their pretended sorrows;—6. Remember your Creator, before the union between your soul and body be loosed, or the pith of your back and nerves be weakened; the vessel in which your brain and animal spirits are contained, be rendered unfit for use; your veins and arteries, which convey the blood and vital spirits, be rendered unfit to convey them any more from the right or left ventricles of your heart; 7. And your body be laid in the grave, to moulder into dust, and your soul appear to be judged before God who formed it. —11. The words of the prophets, and other holy men of God, are fitted to excite men's attention, awaken their conscience, and quicken their affections; and to make a powerful and lasting impression on their hearts, and so settle and establish them in the truth;—being inculcated by zealous teachers of the church, sent and qualified by Jesus Christ, the alone Head of his church.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAP. XII.—Necessary and pleasant is an early acquaintance with Christ and his ways. But very absurd and dangerous are delays of spiritual concerns till old age, which may never be seen, and is a season very improper for commencing such care. Thrice happy are they who encounter the unnumbered infirmities and troubles of old age, and the fears and pangs of death, in the full assurance that Jesus loved them, and gave himself for them! But, alas! how difficult is it to persuade us of the emptiness of all created things! This truth needs to be inculcated a thousand times over. Nor will that avail, unless the Holy Ghost inscribe it on our heart. It is necessary then that all preachers should be sent and qualified by Christ and his Spirit; and that, by every possible mean, they should labour to fix the truths of God in the consciences, understandings, affections, and memories of their hearers. And let us, in our religious course, attend chiefly to the principal points; and always act under the awe, and in the faith and hope of the last judgment.

CONCLUDING REMARKS ON THE BOOK OF ECCLESIASTES.

THE most common view of the Book of Ecclesiastes, represents it as "a philosophical inquiry after the summum bonum, or chief good of man; in which Solomon states the various opinions on the subject, the result of his own dear-bought experience in search of the respective enjoyments of human wisdom, and human folly." Without altogether excluding this view, others think Solomon's main design was to "prove the immortality of the soul, or rather the necessity of another state after this life, by such arguments as may be deduced from reason and experience."

Now, in all this, it is not a little remarkable—it is not a little lamentable—that it never seems to have occurred to the learned authors of these opinions, that Christ and his church formed any direct object of Solomon's investigation! Yet how strange if the wisest man could have written a book in which the "Wisdom of God" obtained no place!

"Much of the obscurity, it has been observed, which is generally admitted to exist in the book of Ecclesiastes, arises from not attending to the train of argument proposed by Solomon, which difficulty the ordinary division of chapters and verses is supposed to have contributed to increase."*

Now that, like other portions of Scripture, the book of Ecclesiastes contains some, or many, things "hard to be understood," cannot be denied. But has not its peculiar obscurities arisen from neglecting the beams of "the Sun of righteousness" shining so brightly in all its pages, rather than from any inattention to the mere train of a philosophical argument? That Ecclesiastes is a book of argument is admitted; but not in any other sense than that in which the Epistles to the Romans, Galatians, and Hebrews, are books of argument. That is, the statements, illustrations, and conclusions, are never of man, but from the Spirit of God.

If by "wisdom" is to be understood anything less than the knowledge that "God was in Christ, reconciling the world unto himself," (2 Cor. 5. 19,) then, indeed, is the book of Ecclesiastes not only obscure, but often unintelligible. But if the "wisdom" sought and commended by Solomon be, the knowledge of "Christ, the wisdom of God," then the obscurity of the book becomes illuminated, and "he may run that readeth it," Hab. 2. 2.

* Horne's Introduction.

Another source of its obscurity may be found in the principle of interpretation ordinarily adopted. A principle neither warranted by anything in the book itself, nor by authority of any other book of Holy Scripture. This principle is the assumption that the book "was written by Solomon in his old age, after he had repented of his sinful practices; and when, having seen and observed much, as well as having enjoyed everything that he could wish, he was fully convinced of the vanity of everything but piety towards God."* Now, that Solomon wrote the book at an advanced period of his reign, is obvious from chap. 2. 4—11; but, though all his recorded labours terminate in "vexation," there is not one single reference to any special "sinfulness" in his pursuits—an omission totally inconsistent with the genius of Scripture, which never fails in the most direct acknowledgment and condemnation of the sins of its chiefest characters. Had the book, therefore, been a confession of sin and retractation of error, these must have furnished its most plain and prominent statements. Sin would have been called sin, and not mere "vanity and vexation of spirit;" for these words, however strong and expressive, come far short of that self-abasement and abhorrence which the consciousness of sin against God must produce, whenever his Spirit leads the sinner to repentance. The conclusion, therefore, is inevitable—Ecclesiastes is neither an acknowledgment nor retractation of sin in the inspired author, but an illustration of the insufficiency of all "treasures on earth" for the purpose of inducing men to "lay up their treasures in heaven," to "set their affections on things above, where Christ sitteth on the right hand of God."

But the chief source of obscurity may be detected in two principles that would reduce light itself into darkness,—the first, taking words in a sense the writer never intended,—the second, interpreting by figures of speech that he never employed. Examples of the first may be found in the meaning attached to "good" in chap. 2. 24. & 3. 13, &c., where the real good intended is commonly referred to unlimited sensual indulgence; and the second is exemplified, (chap. 11. 9,) where a plain and godly admonition is commonly interpreted as a bitter irony.

In the preceding notes these arbitrary principles of interpretation have been altogether rejected; and, in subordination to the teaching of the Spirit, the book has been treated as its own expositor.—Ed.

ADDITIONAL EDITORIAL NOTES ON THE BOOK OF ECCLESIASTES.

Chap. II. Ver. 25. For who can eat, or who else can hasten hereunto, more than I?—The best Hebrew MSS. concur with the evident sense of the passage, in reading for "more than I"—"without him," that is, without God's gift.

Chap. III. Ver. 8. A time to hate.—Not a time permitted to hate, but which the carnal mind so perverts. Tit. 3. 3.

Chap. IV. Ver. 16. There is no end of all the people, even of all that have been before them.—"There is no end to all the people, to all by whom he is made a leader; but they that come after shall not rejoice in him." That is, the popularity even of the son, not of an old and foolish, but of a young and wise king, may soon pass away: such is the instability of human opinion, and the vanity of human praise.

Chap. VIII. Ver. 10. I saw the wicked buried, who had come and gone from the place of the holy, and they were forgotten in the city where they had so done. Wickedly ruled, "to their own hurt"—raised, as they imagined, imperishable monuments of their fame—died, and were forgotten—leaving nought but a new proof, that "all is vanity."

Chap. IX. Ver. 10. Whatsoever thy hand findeth to do, do it with thy might; for there is no work, nor device, nor knowledge, nor wisdom, in the grave.—"What a life I have spent in laboriously doing nothing!" was the melancholy reflection of a learned man on his death-bed. And so must it be with the most diligent, if he do not embrace the four departments to which Solomon directs the intellectual and active energies, work, device, knowledge, wisdom. Time spent in bodily works but trains an animal; time spent in artful devices but fosters a serpent; time spent in worldly knowledge but collects a library: it is, when neglecting neither of these, man "applies his heart to wisdom," that he puts forth "all his might," and fulfils through grace, the great ends of his creation.

Chap. X. Ver. 9. Whoso removeth stones shall be hurt therewith; and he that cleaveth wood shall be endangered thereby.—That is, he that doeth these things fraudulently and violently, as in digging a pit, or breaking a hedge, ver. 8.

Chap. XII. Ver. 5. When they shall be afraid of that which is high, and fears shall be in the way, and the almond-tree shall flourish, and the grashopper shall be a burden, and desire shall fail.—Afraid of ascents, because of debility.—"The almond-tree shall flourish"—the hair shall become white as the almond blossom; or, rather shall fall off.—"The grashopper" or locust, almost light as air that needs not his support, and instantly flies away.—"Desire" of food, company, music, fair prospects, &c.

THE SONG OF SOLOMON

Could not be a nuptial hymn composed in honour of any of his wives; for it was not composed till after the tower of Lebanon was built; chap. vii. 4; and so not till about twenty years after his marriage with Pharaoh's daughter. Many of the emblems used in it; as, to be made a keeper of the vineyard, to have a head like Carmel, a nose like the tower of Lebanon, eyes like fish-pools, teeth like a flock of sheep, and to be terrible as an army with banners, &c. if applied to a fine lady, are absurd to the last degree: but if the whole be understood, of the union and fellowship between Christ and his people, it will appear most exalted, instructive, and animating. The name of God is not found in it, more than in Esther; nor could the continued allegory of the book well admit of it. But the agreement of its matter and language with other passages of scripture; as Is. liv. 5; and lxii. 4, 5; Hos. ii. 19, 20; Mat. xxv. 1—10; ix. 15; and iii. 9; Rom. vii. 4; 2 Cor. xi. 2; Eph. v. 32; Rev. xix. 7; and xxi. 2, 9; and especially with Ps. xlv; its majestic style; its efficacy on the consciences of men for promoting their spiritual comfort and holiness; the sincerity of the bride in acknowledging her faults; and, in fine, the general reception of it by the Jewish and Christian churches; sufficiently prove it inspired of God. To such as read it with a carnal and wanton mind, it will be the savour of death unto death: but to such as, acquainted with fellowship with Christ, peruse it with a spiritual and heavenly frame, it will prove a savour of life unto life, a counterpart of their gracious experience. It is a dialogue; in which the speakers are Jesus Christ, the blessed Bridegroom of souls; the church, which is his body and bride, and every particular saint in it; and the daughters of Jerusalem, or Zion, who are either nominal professors of the true religion, or, at best, young and weak converts. The scope of it is to represent Christ and his people's mutual esteem of, desire after, and delight in, one another. And as the bride denotes either the church in general, or a particular believer, the members, &c. attributed to her must have different significations assigned them, according as the one or the other is understood.

The title of this book, "The Song of Songs," is generally understood to assert its eminence amongst, or superiority over, all other songs. Some eminent Hebraists, however, are disposed to translate the title "The Series of Songs;" and this seems more consonant to the modesty of the sacred writer, who would be very unlikely to assume any special eminence, also to that equality which divine inspiration implies amongst the books of Scripture, as well as to the structure of the book itself, which changes so rapidly its speakers, time, place, and objects.

The ancient Jews, without exception, considered it a book divinely inspired, and inserted it in their sacred writings. By our Lord it was consequently authorized, when he exhorted the Jews to "search the Scriptures;" and, by Paul, when he affirmed that "all Scripture is given by inspiration of God." With the full conviction of its divine origin, it was newly translated into Greek, in the second century, by three eminent Christian divines; and, in the third, it was inserted by Origen in his Hexapla, who also wrote some discourses explanatory of its sacred meaning.

Notwithstanding this concurrence, its divine authority is said to have been questioned in the fifth century by Theodore of Mopsuestia; and occasionally, down to the present day, various objections against its inspiration have been started by Christian divines. Now, without questioning either the objects, or the principles of these objectors, it is not a little to be lamented that their learning has been so misapplied. For if the reception of the book by the Jewish church, and its approbation by our Lord and his apostles, be not, to a Christian, sufficient evidence of its divine authority, any higher evidence it must be impossible to obtain; and, if this evidence is to be rejected in the case of one book, there is no ground for its sufficiency in the case of any other.

The objections to the divine authority of this book have arisen, as in the case of Ecclesiastes, from assuming an unauthorized principle of interpretation, and pronouncing the book a mere marriage song, and consequently unfitted for religious instruction. But again, whereas in Ecclesiastes, a book confessedly didactic, the ordinary and natural application of words has been rejected—in the Song of Solomon, a book confessedly written in similitudes or parables, the emblematic application of words has been rejected.

The Christian disciple will, however, make light of these cavils, and calmly repose upon the authentication of the book, derived from Christ and his apostles. And, while so reposing, he will find a treasury filled to overflowing with the unsearchable riches of Christ. He will be led into a banqueting-house of boundless hospitality; he will mingle with a company of purity and love; he will traverse gardens of loveliest flowers and sweetest odours; he will repose beneath trees with coolest shade and ripest fruits; thence will he climb the Lebanon heights of contemplation, and gaze upon the lovely land that lies beneath his feet, the land of his inheritance and his home, where Christ is the King, saints the subjects, and love the law; where the subjects themselves are kings and priests unto God, clad in the robes of the Lamb's immaculate righteousness, and crowned with the diadem of his unfading glory.

Some eminent interpreters have considered this book as a sacred drama extended through seven days, and have divided it into scenes, each of a day's continuance. Others have concluded it to be a succession of idyls, or little poems, with no connexion of time, place, or person: but merely possessing some common object as their only principle of union.

In the following notes these principles of interpretation will be diffidently—on account of their authors—but firmly rejected, from their want of any but conjectural authority. The principles of interpretation adopted will be, (1) The grammatical, including the singularity, or plurality, or sexes, of the speakers. (2) Change of place. (3) Change of time. (4) Change of objects. (5) Change of sentiment or action. (6) The parallel—comparing spiritual with spiritual, explaining what here is unknown by what is elsewhere acknowledged. By following these natural principles, and book will be found a succession of beautiful, impressive and instructive—emblems of natural pictures, representing spiritual originals—an outward form of what is earthly, fabricated for little children, but with an inward spirit of what is only intended for perfect men.—ED.

EXPLANATORY NOTES. CHAP. I.—Ver. 2. Blessed Jesus, upon whom I have been meditating, by thy word and Spirit give me intimate fellowship with thee in thy ordinances, and full assurances of thy friendship: for the manifestations of thy redeeming love are more pleasant, reviving, and strengthening to my soul, than any created enjoyments. 3. Such is the pleasant and powerful influence of thy mediatorial excellencies, offices, relations, and fulness of spirit and grace, that sincere and holy souls cannot but love thee with their whole heart. 4. By thy almighty influence direct and bring me into the nearest enjoyment of thyself, that, I, and others excited by me, may pleasantly comply with thy alluring power, and follow hard after thee in the paths of duty.—Jesus, the King of his church, has already brought me into the most ravishing nearness to, and spiritual intimacy with, himself; therefore will we rejoice in him as our ALL and IN ALL; we will think of, believe, and extol his love above all created delights: for every candid and sincere professor heartily esteems, loves, and delights in thee. 5. In myself, and in respect of manifold infirmities, scandals, reproaches, and persecutions, I am deformed; but in my Head Christ, and as clothed with his righteousness, and endued by his Spirit, gifts, and graces, I am truly comely, O ye nominal professors and weak believers:—I am outwardly mean, but inwardly rich and glorious. 6. Look not therefore upon me with disdain, disaffection, or delight in my distresses, nor stumble at religion on account of them; for sore persecutions, tribulations, and temptations, are befallen me: hypocritical professors, false teachers, and my own inward corruptions, enraged at my connexion with Christ, and my cleaving to him, have oppressed me with the basest drudgery, and entangled me in carnal cares and secular affairs, which have hindered me from, or retarded me in, the due improvement of my own office, opportunities, gifts, and graces. 7. But, O all-compassionate Redeemer, whom I love with my whole heart, and above everything else, discover to me, by thy word and Spirit, which is thy true church, and which are those assemblies wherein thou art remarkably present, and to whom thou affordest spiritual support and consolation amidst all their scorching persecutions and troubles: for why should I, whom thou hast redeemed, and who have sincerely devoted my whole self to thee, be left to associate myself with empty professors, false teachers, and inward idols, who, notwithstanding their pretences of friendship, are thy enemies and rivals on earth!

CHRIST. Ver. 8. O ye excellent ones of the earth, beautified with my salvation, righteousness, and grace, and whose church state is adorned with my ordinances, if your knowledge of duty be still indistinct, inquire after, observe, and follow the example of the saints in former and present ages; and let weak believers and young converts, with their weak or languishing graces, carefully attend my public ordinances dispensed by my faithful pastors. 9. And be encouraged in my love; for, notwithstanding the weakness which you feel, and the self-deformity which you discover, I, your Redeemer and Husband, have, and will render you comely and active, and will give you sufficient strength and courage to withstand and conquer your spiritual enemies, and to glorify me by your holy conversation. 10. Whilst your church state is beautifully adorned by divine oracles, ordinances, gifts, and graces, professors, and ministers, your particular conversation before the world appears beautifully marked with a variety of precious and holy qualities, and your faith, by which you are united to my person as your Head, is precious and glorious in itself, and is productive of every good word and work. 11. And I, my Father, and the blessed Spirit, will for ever continue and increase, and at last perfect these your spiritual ornaments.

BELIEVERS. 12. O that we may enjoy these effectual and ornamenting operations of thy grace! For, whilst thou, Jesus, dost converse familiarly with us in thine ordinances, how pleasant are thy promises and truths to our heart, and how vigorous and active, and acceptable to thee, are our implanted graces. 13. And, even during the night of trouble or time, how delightfully art thou, our beloved Husband, found in the public and private ordinances of thy grace, and art entertained by the most cordial embracements of our faith and love! 14. O what an inexpressibly delightful and precious system of excellencies, fountain of graces, source of blessings, repository of promises, treasure of pardoning, healing, comforting, nourishing, quickening, and refreshing influence, art thou to our heart!

CHRIST. 15. How comely and glorious is my church, as endowed with ordinances, and reformed by my word and Spirit; and how adorned with intelligent, sincere, peaceful, peace-proclaiming, and faithful pastors, who search into gospel truths, and watch over, direct, and go before every individual member of it. And how certainly, and eminently comely, is every believing soul clothed with my righteousness, and endowed with my grace! How quick and discerning their spiritual understanding! How chaste, sincere, and single their affections, without the least glance of spiritual whoredom!

BELIEVERS. 16. But, blessed and divine Husband, what is all my derived comeliness in respect of thine, in thy person, offices, relations, and grace? How delightful are all these to my heart! How pleasantly effectual is thy covenant, and the ordinances of thy gospel, for the conversion and consolation of souls, and for rendering them fruitful in good works! 17. And strong, durable, and lasting is thy church, in which I am honoured to dwell, and consists of such parts and members as shall never decay; and permanent are all her oracles, ordinances, and offices.

Reflections upon Chap. I.—How precious and pleasant Christ is to believing souls! Ardently do they pant after further communications of his grace; sensible that they can do nothing of themselves, but Jesus must do all in them and for them. He takes the sweetest delight in speedily answering their prayers, and satisfying their souls with his loving-kindness; though often, amidst his kind visits, their outward state is such as lookers-on are apt to stumble at. With what pain and grief do lively saints lament the want of frequent and intimate fellowship with him and his people in the ordinances! But he is ready to direct and comfort them in this condition. He has done, and will do, for them the most amazing things, in furnishing them with his righteousness, his grace, and his glory. All their life, their strength, their grace, their comfort, their happiness, come from him. His heart is full of high esteem and unbounded affection for them. And, through familiar fellowship with him, they receive and enjoy his comforting, sanctifying, and preserving influence.

Chap. II. Christ.—Ver. 1. I am indeed glorious in my person as God-man, and in my mediatorial relations, estates, and works; and am infinitely comely, refreshing, and medicinal to every believing soul. 2. And partaking of my comeliness, righteousness, and grace, thou, my church, art incomparably more excellent and useful than all the societies, and ye, my people, than all the persons on earth.

Believers. 3. But infinitely more my beloved Jesus excels angels and men in everything gracious, glorious, and operative. Often have I, under the covert of his righteousness, love, power, and providence, fearless of danger from heaven, earth, or hell, believingly viewed, admired, and applied to my soul, his person, offices, and relations, with all the pardon, peace, acceptance, adoption, sanctification, comfort, and endless glory, which flow therefrom! 4. Powerfully has he admitted me to partake of his fulness, in the most ravishing manner, in his word and ordinances. And the manifestations of his love have effectually protected me from enemies, and encouraged and animated me to my spiritual work and warfare. 5. Ye ministers and fellow-professors, often have I needed your sympathy, direction, and comfort, under my sad perplexity and desertion. But, oh! if you could now help me, to bear up under these ravishing discoveries and communications of Jesus' love! Oh for further and unspeakably more enlarged enjoyment of him, to strengthen me for supporting under, and improving what I have; 6. But why do I ask your assistance? While I enjoy the safe, the delightful, and intimate embraces of an incarnate God, and have the secrets of his covenant imparted to my soul, his promise, power, and grace, marvellously uphold, delight, and invigorate my heart. 7. I therefore charge you, my fellow-professors, by everything kind, pleasant, or delightful, that ye disturb not my fellowship with him, nor do, nor cause me to do anything which may provoke him to withdraw this sensible visit of his love. 8. Lo! though he had withdrawn, yet I now hear his voice, in the ministry of his word and motions of his Spirit. Behold, he comes removing and triumphing over every hinderance of my fellowship with him! 9. Behold, in the most lively, lovely, and affectionate manner, he comes forward in the influence of his grace, and unto an actual assumption of our nature! Behold he, the substance of all our ceremonies, manifests his glorious and gracious excellencies, through them, and vouchsafes some obscure and transient glimpses of himself in every ordinance! 10. In what a heart-melting manner he said to my soul, Rouse up thyself from thy partial deadness, sloth, and security, and disentangle thyself more fully from the snares of the world and thy own lusts. Exercise thy faith in the most active, bold, and assured degree, in partaking of the most delightful fellowship with me: 11. For all impediments, arising from the wrath of God, the guilt or dominion of sin, or from terrible troubles, are now removed. 12—14. Now are come the days of power and times of love, in which the dispensations of the gospel are attended with almighty influence, and multitudes are, to their everlasting joy and comfort, converted to me, and rendered fruitful in good works. Arise, therefore, my poor, meek, chaste, but often persecuted bride; let no despondency, no sense of thy unworthiness, deter thee from approaching my presence in prayer and other holy duties: for both thy person and services are accepted by me, and are inexpressibly amiable in my sight. 15. And while ecclesiastical rulers take pains, both by doctrine and discipline, to free my church from false teachers, even those who have but begun to vent their errors and irregularities, as they greatly mar her purity, peace, order, and beauty, and are especially apt to mislead weak believers, let every one be careful to search out, and mortify his own inward lusts, as these, if indulged, exceedingly mar the work of grace in their hearts.—16. This kind inviter is my glorious Husband and Mediator, given of God to, and accepted by, me; and I am his by the Father's donation, his own purchase and conquest, and by my surrender of myself to him. And O the infinite delight he takes in his people, and to converse with them in his ordinances! 17 Till the gospel day, in its pleasant light and powerful influence, break, and the shadows of Jewish ceremonies flee away; nay, till the day of perfect glory dawn, and all the shadows of desertion, temptation, and trouble are fled; do thou, blessed Jesus, often surprise me with the discoveries of thy glory and communications of thy grace, notwithstanding whatever hinderances, guilt, and wickedness are found with me.

Reflections upon Chap. II.—O the unbounded glory and infinite usefulness of Jesus Christ, and the glory and usefulness of his people as connected with him! What must be the immediate enjoyment of God and the Lamb, when the imperfect and mediate enjoyment on earth is sometimes so transporting? Detested for ever be that heart which would change one hour's fellowship with Christ for all the pleasures, honours, and riches on earth. Tenderly should it be managed, and carefully improved and maintained. A small thing may interrupt it; and with the greatest reluctance and grief should the believing soul mourn over its want. Strong as death must be the love of our Redeemer, which makes him come to his people over every mountain of distance, darkness, wrath, provocation, and pollution. How

CHAPTER III.

(1) Anxious seeking, temptations, and victory: 1—5. (2) Excellence commended: 6—11.

A. M. cir. 3989. B. C. cir. 995.

BY [a] night on my bed I sought him whom my soul loveth: I sought him, but I found him not.[*]

2 I will rise now, and go about the city in the streets, and in the broad ways I will seek him whom my soul loveth: I sought him, but I found him not.

3 The watchmen that go about the city found me; to whom I said, Saw ye him whom my soul loveth?

4 It was but a little that I passed from them, but I found him whom my soul loveth: I held him, and would not let him go, until I had brought him into my mother's house, and into the chamber of her that conceived me.

5 I charge you, O ye daughters of Jerusalem, by the roes, and by the hinds of the field, that ye stir not up, nor awake my love, till he please.[†]

6 ¶ Who is this that cometh out of the wilderness like pillars of smoke, perfumed with myrrh and frankincense, with all powders of the merchant?[‡]

7 Behold [b] his bed, which is Solomon's:[§] threescore valiant men are about it, of the valiant of Israel.

8 [c] They all hold swords,[‖] being expert in war: every man hath his sword upon his thigh because of fear in the night.

9 King Solomon made himself a chariot[*] of the wood of Lebanon.

10 He made the pillars thereof of silver, the bottom thereof of gold, the covering of it of purple, the midst thereof being paved with love, for the daughters of Jerusalem.[†]

a Is. 26. 9. Ps. 63. 6. 7. & 4. 4. & 22. 2. & 77. 2—4.

[*] "In the night."—That state of comparative darkness in which the believer and the whole church are still surrounded. See Rom. 13. 11, 12.—I sought him in his word for direction, and in his promises for support.—I found him not.—The seeker does not say, I believed him not, but "I found him not:" because, for more exercise of faith and faithful seeking, he calls the soul (the church) to add to private contemplation and prayer, the observance and use of christian converse and public ordinances. See ver. 2.—Ed.

[†] See chap. 2. 7.—Ed.

[‡] The emblem here changes to the arrival of a traveller coming out of the wilderness, not like the way-worn Israelites when they emerged from its solitudes, but as a beauteous and beloved bride borne in splendour, and escorted by the mighty.—Note. The Hebrew shows the traveller is a female.—Ed.

[‖] Swords.—The emblem of that "sword of the Spirit, which is the word of God;" (Eph. 6. 17.) and which every faithful soldier of Christ must bear for the defence of truth in the church.—Ed.

A. M. cir. 3989. B. C. cir. 995.

[*] A chariot—Rather, "a throne," as the mention of pillars seems to require, and as the word may be translated, "King Solomon made himself a throne"—the emblem of the King of Zion enthroned in glory, the reward and production of his humiliation unto death. Phil. 2. 5—11.—Ed.

CHAPTER IV.

(1) Emblems of beauty: 1—7. (2) Invitations to companionship: 8. (3) Love gained and beauty praised: 9—15. (4) Blessings and communion sought: 16.

A. M. cir. 3989. B. C. cir. 975.

BEHOLD, thou art fair, my love;[*] behold, thou art fair; thou hast doves' eyes within thy locks: thy hair is as a flock of goats that appear from mount Gilead.

2 Thy teeth are like a flock of sheep that are even shorn, which came up from the washing; whereof every one bear twins, and none is barren[†] among them.

3 Thy lips are like a thread of scarlet, and thy speech is comely: thy temples are like a piece of a pomegranate within thy locks.

4 Thy neck is like the tower of David, builded for an armoury, whereon there hang a thousand bucklers, all shields of mighty men.

[*] "My Partner," "Thine eyes are doves' (see chap. 1. 15.) behind thy veil."—"Thine hair as a flock of goats." They must have seen the beautiful hair of some of the Asiatic goats who would appreciate this comparison.—Ed.

[†] None is barren.—"None is companionless," an allusion to the correspondence of the upper and lower teeth, upon which both their beauty and utility so much depend.—Note. Personal beauty, like the other gifts of God, is good, and may, if not abused, be used for most gracious purposes. The details of personal beauty form, accordingly, most appropriate emblems of those gifts of the Spirit wherewith Christ adorns the believer, and his bride the church. Ed.

earnest and affecting are his invitations to familiar intercourse with himself! And what a change in the world is made by his oracles, ordinances, and influence! But wicked ministers in a church, and carnal lusts in a heart, are our greatest plagues, and should be carefully removed. And the assured faith of our relation to Christ will make us effectually to long and cry for frequent and familiar fellowship with him.

CHAP. III.—Ver. 1. In time of desertion and trouble, and of a secure and slothful frame, in prayer, and other private ordinances, I endeavoured to regain the sensible communications of Jesus' love: I persevered therein, but without any discernible success. 2. Stirring up myself therefore to a more active and lively frame of spirit, I attended the public ordinances of his worship, in order to obtain communion with himself. I often repeated my endeavours, but met with nothing but disappointments and discouragements. 3. Faithful ministers, who, with care and labour inspect the souls of men, were often directed to speak pointedly to my case, which encouraged me to open it to them in familiar conversation, and beg their assistance in furthering my fellowship with him. 4. Not resting in duties and ordinances, by faith I essayed still more earnest and immediate application to Jesus himself. He graciously vouchsafed me his sensible presence. Then my heart clave to him by a lively exercise of faith, and by the most ardent and resolute affection. I carefully avoided everything which tended to disturb our fellowship, or provoke his withdrawment; and not only laboured to get intimate enjoyment and full assurance of his love to myself, but to have his promised presence in the church and the public ordinances thereof. 5. I therefore again charge you, my fellow-professors or saints, to avoid everything which may in the least tend to mar my intercourse with him.

DAUGHTERS OF JERUSALEM. 6. What amazing persons are those, who, separated from the world in affection, and delivered from former troubles, mount up heavenward in faith, in love, in spiritual-mindedness, and in holy desires and conversation;—all acceptable to God through Jesus' merits and intercession, and endowed with the manifold and precious graces of his Holy Spirit!

BELIEVERS. 7, 8. Nay, admire not us, nor the glories which we have freely received from Christ; but behold that new covenant of grace, and that familiar fellowship with him, which are the causes of everything amiable in us, and in which we are watched over and protected, amidst all our dangers, by almighty perfections, attendant angels, and vigilant ministers. 9, 10. Behold how, according to his mere good pleasure, and for his own glory, he has not only assumed our nature in the most precious and useful form, but has formed a new covenant, and a gospel dispensation,—reared on stable, precious, and supporting promises,—founded in the unchangeable and everlasting love and purpose of God, in which men are protected by his righteousness and royal power; and his unbounded love makes everything proper, refreshing, and supporting, for the members of his church, in order to transport them, in fellowship with him, through this world into the heavenly state! 11. Go forth then, my fellow-professors, from your unregeneracy, your self-righteousness, your filthy lusts, your carnal cares and sluggish frames; and with earnestness, faith, love, and wonder, observe Jesus, our Prince of Peace, not only crowned by his Father with the highest glory and honour, but even by all the true members of his church, in their acceptance of him, and submission to him, as their Husband, Saviour, and Lord; particularly in that day of power, and time of love, in which, to his inexpressible satisfaction, they are united to him by faith.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAP. III.—In this world the clearest days of intimate fellowship with Christ, are suddenly turned into nights of desertion, trouble, ignorance, and sloth. But precious and dear is Jesus to lively saints;—nothing can content them without his presence and favour: and they count no labour nor suffering too hard to obtain it. Great is his love to them. He is loath to contend long with his people, lest their spirit should fail before him. And an hour, a minute of his presence, richly rewards all their pains and sorrows in seeking for it. Promising is the appearance when the word preached pointedly touches the heart and conscience of hearers, and leads them to careful inquiries concerning Christ. And remarkable fellowship with him effectually animates to an earnest wrestling in behalf of the church and public interests of religion. What extensive honour believers procure to themselves from all around them, by an earnest care to maintain fellowship with him, and to follow him in a gracious, upright, and heavenly conversation! But if distinguished saints be so admirable and lovely, how much more is Christ himself and his covenant! With great care ought we to labour to have the heart and eyes of all around us fixed on him: for great indeed is his love, that he should take pleasure in espousing to himself poor, guilty, polluted, diseased, infamous, and mischievous sinners of mankind.

CHAP. IV.—Ver. 1—5, 7. Behold how glorious is the state of my church decked with ordinances, officers, and saints! How comely is she when ministers, her lights, or eyes, are intelligent, modest, humble, and holy, walking in all godly simplicity!—when converts, rooted in me as their Head, grow up in grace and perfect holiness in the fear of the Lord—feeding on the rich pastures of my word, and surrendering themselves acceptable sacrifices to God!—How comely is she when ministers, who prepare spiritual nourishment for others, are sound in their doctrine, holy in their conversation, harmonious and meek in their behaviour, and active and successful in winning souls to me!—when their ministrations mark the soundness of their hearts!—when their dwelling on redemption through my blood, as their principal theme, renders themselves and their ministrations lively and pleasant; and when, with modesty, singleness, prudence, and order, they, and other rulers, govern the flocks committed to their care!—when they, as superior to others in station, and as means of connecting them with Christ, and of conveying their spiritual nourishment, are upright, steady, and strong, and do watch over the church, and actively improve the whole armour of God for her defence and honour! —and when her various oracles, ordinances, and officers, are remarkably useful for supplying the souls of men with the nourishing milk of God's word!—But especially how fair and comely are believers, with respect to their personal capacity, when justified in my righteousness, and adorned with every spiritual grace!—when their spiritual knowledge, faith, and affection, are sincere, single, humble, and seasonably discovered!—when their conversation in thought, word, and deed, notwithstanding many imperfections, is orderly and pure, manifesting a heart nourished in the pastures of the gospel!—when, by repeated acts of faith and meditation, they improve their spiritual provision; and their zeal for God is uniform, pure, and moderate, animating them to a fruitfulness in good works, and in winning others to me!—when their prayers and converse are profitable and pleasant, discovering the soundness of their heart, animated, and furnished by, and accepted through, my blood!—when there is much secret and holy blushing on account of remaining defects!—when their faith, which unites them to me, furnishes with, and effectually improves, the whole armour of God for their defence from spiritual enemies, as the worthies of God formerly experienced!—when, feeding upon the doctrine of the prophets and apostles, they, to my inexpressible pleasure, abound in faith and love towards me, and in care to instruct and edify others!—How completely perfect are they in their justification, in the extent of their sanctification, and in my purpose and favourable acceptation. 6, 8. Till not only the gospel dispensation, but even the glorious millennium, and the resurrection to everlasting life, come, I, according to thy request, (chap. ii. 17.) will continue to bestow my special presence and influence in my church, which is rendered so delightful by my ordinances, and by the precious graces, prayers, and praises of my people.—Let therefore every one spiritually espoused to me, there attend, and hold intimate fellowship with me, setting their affections on things above; forsaking the most excellent creature-satisfactions for my sake, shunning the intimacy of carnal, covetous, and violent men, and even the fellowship of superstitious, erroneous, and persecuting churches. 9, 10. O redeemed soul, partaker of the same human nature with me, begotten and adopted of my Father, and spiritually betrothed to my person, how, even with the weakest acts of thy faith, and the smallest degree of sincere grace and holy obedience, hast thou claimed, attracted, encouraged, and coupled my heart to thee! How incomparably acceptable and delightful is thy love, and that sweet fragrancy flowing from thy manifold graces! 11. How delightful thy prayers and praise! Thy instructing, reproving, and comforting discourse, marks what sweet and nourishing truths and experiences are lodged in thy heart, and how delightful and attractive is thy holy and benevolent conversation! 12—14. My church is a delightful garden, separated from the world, set apart to the service of God, digged by gospel ministrations and influences, and especially protected by my providence, by the rules of order contained in my word, and a medicinal spring of gospel truth, hid from the view of a carnal world! And, when purged of scandalous persons, her converts planted in the new covenant, do flourish more fragrant, delightful, precious, and useful, more numerous and different in circumstances, than all the fruit-bearing trees and spices of an orchard!—Yea, every particular believer is a garden set apart in beautiful order, and with infinite care and labour, to the service of God; and has in him the Holy Ghost, and a principle of grace, as a well of water springing up into everlasting life: and in the most pleasant manner are their various gifts and graces exercised to my honour, their own advantage, and the edification of others.

Believers. 15. Blessed Jesus! great source and bestower of all life here or hereafter, it is to thy influences alone that we owe all our comeliness, fragrancy, and fruitfulness! let them run more abundantly into our hearts, that, by the exercise of thy grace, we may be rendered more useful to water and refresh others around! 16. And since we are thine, as well as under our own care, prevent everything tending to mar our fruitfulness; and let the Holy Ghost, in his convincing and sin-mortifying, as well as in his comforting, influences, stir up and quicken our hearts to a lively exercise of those gifts and graces with which we are endowed. And do thou, O Jesus, manifest thy presence in thine ordinances, and accept of, and delight in, those graces and good works which are wrought in us by thyself!

Reflections upon Chap. IV.—What infinite love Jesus bears to his people! He puts upon them his own comeliness, and wishes them to take the comfort of it. Earnest is his desire of their company: and soon shall they be with him where he is, to share his happiness and honour! Never, but when he went to suffer, did he say, Let these go their way. They are a good savour of Christ to all around or above them. And when they rightly behold their own comeliness in him, it effectually humbles them, and makes them ascribe all the glory to him, and to cry for more abundant supplies of his sanctifying influences. Surely it is the greatest honour for them, as his peculiar property, to keep themselves entirely for his service.

Chap. V. Christ.—Ver. 1. At thy request, believing soul, I vouchsafe my special presence in my church and ordinances. I have, with pleasure, observed thy lively preaching and cordial application of my precious and soul-nourishing truths. I have particularly observed and accepted the graces and services of my people. Let them also feast abundantly on my gospel provision, and take the comfort of their graces and works, as evidences of their election and eternal salvation.

Believers. 2. Alas! the dull and lukewarm frame in which Jesus often finds his churches when he comes to bless them! And how slothful and secure my inward corruption had made me, even while my renewed part endeavoured to hear and entertain him! Amidst much deadness and unconcern, I felt some impressions made upon my heart by his word, Spirit, and rod; while he, in the kindest manner, besought me to exercise my faith and love, and to remove whatever hindered his most intimate approaches, as he was closely related to me, had suffered much for me and from me, had waited long for my opening to him, and was much grieved with my neglect of him! 3. In the most pitiful manner I evaded compliance with his kind invitations, as a thing I was not at present fitted for, and which I could not do without crossing my corrupt inclinations and troubling my flesh. 4. the immediate power of his Spirit, Jesus touched my heart through his word, and kindly stirred up my affections to a concern for my former slighting of him, and to an earnest desire after his presence. 5. Repenting of my former stupidity and indifference, and actuated by his influence, I prepared myself to entertain his visit; my faith, and other graces, put themselves into active and vigorous motion, for the removal of everything that tended to hinder his access to my soul. 6. Notwithstanding my vigorous actings of faith upon his self-giving promises, and panting desires after him, I did not obtain any sensible manifestations of his presence. My heart was then filled with pain, grief, and shame, at the remembrance of his slighted invitation. I carefully attended his ordinances, public and private, in order to seek and find him: but met with nothing but frowns and disappointments. 7. When ministers touched my case in their discourses, they but raised my hopes and increased my anguish: by their harsh reproofs, calumnies, and persecutions, they wounded and distressed my soul. They, whose duty it is to prevent everything tending to disturb the peace and edification of the church, questioned the truth of my profession, and charged me with the vilest hypocrisy. 8. O! my fellow-professors, I beg and charge you, that if this my Lord Jesus allow you any sensible intimacy with himself, you will represent to him the distressed case of my soul, and entreat him speedily to visit me, who earnestly desires him, and am at the point of death for want of his sensible presence.

DAUGHTERS. 9. Distressed, but precious and lovely saint, what means this so solemn charge? What singular and transcendent excellency is in this Jesus, the beloved of thy heart?

BELIEVERS. 10. Boundless and incomparable is his excellency! A glorious Godhead and a suffering manhood, a holiness of heart and life, and a bloody suffering, a glorious exaltation, and an humble debasement, mercy towards his people, and vengeance against his enemies, concur to render him in every respect a miracle of beauty! He is infinitely more dignified, kind, rich, and glorious, than all the ten thousands of created beings in heaven and in earth; and, as the great standard-bearer, he goes forth, attended by angels and saints, conquering and to conquer. 11. In his divine nature, and as he is the Head of government and influence to his people, he is pure, precious, substantial, glorious, useful, enriching, and unchangeable? Lasting and immutable is his comeliness! Beautiful, mysterious, and majestic, are his well-connected purposes and providences! And ever fresh and comely those societies of saints which are rooted and grounded in him! 12. Pure, penetrating, pleasant, beautiful, and comforting, is his all-seeing knowledge, and his tender pity and care! 13. Delightful the manifestations of his love, glory, and grace! His words are gracious and comfortable, continually refreshing, quickening, and supporting to the souls of his people! 14. Perfect, glorious, and lasting, and all managed with infinite skill, are his munificent liberality, almighty power, and marvellous works, particularly of grace! Sincere, lasting, and wisely ordered, for the good of his people, are his secret purposes of love, his tender bowels of mercy and compassion, and his sympathizing intercession! 15. Sufficient and wisely exerted are his strength and power to bear, or act, in the work of our redemption! Skilfully contrived; and firmly fixed on the precious and durable foundations of his grace, are the dispensations of his providence! Elevated, stately, and pleasant, always verdant and refreshing, is the full manifestation of him in all his excellencies! 16. Pleasant is his word, and the sensible communications of his love! Nay, all that is, in his person, offices, relations, names, blessings, and ordinances, is inexpressibly desirable; and nothing is truly desirable but as in, or connected with, him. This, this, O fellow-professors, is my spiritual Husband, and my constant and sympathizing lover and benefactor.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAP. V.—Quickly, when entreated, does Jesus come to comfort the hearts and supply the wants of his people; and brings with him for their refreshment the fulness of promises, grace, and joy. Enlarged appetites, after spiritual blessings, are necessary for gospel hearers. But it is strange that even saints should refuse his gracious visits, for which they had earnestly prayed and patiently waited. Hard is the heart that remains untouched by his affectionate calls; base is the temper which renders men careless about him and his influences; and shameful and frivolous are the best excuses which can be made for evading his visits. It is indeed impossible for saints wholly to exclude him from their heart; and they procure for themselves great grief and toil by neglecting to entertain his offered kindness. But it is base for ministers to act imprudently and untenderly towards those whose spirits the Lord has wounded. More dutiful and profitable is it to strive in prayers for one another. And how pleasant when, even under desertion, saints maintain the most exalted view of Jesus' person and fulness, and the most assured faith of their interest in them; and when even curious inquiries concerning him draw forth the warmest commendations of him!

CHAP. VI.—DAUGHTERS. Ver. 1. Precious saint, tell us where we may hope to find this thy beloved Saviour, that we may, after thy example, and in holy fellowship with thee, more heartily than ever seek him.

BELIEVERS. 2. Jesus, my beloved, is always present in his church, and is especially conversant in those assemblies where the graces of his people are most eminent; taking pleasure in, and increasing their grace and comforts, and delighting to convert, and afterwards glorify, his whole elect body. 3. And, notwithstanding all my miscarriages, the mutual relation between him and me is as full and firm as ever; and he still delights himself in the assemblies of his people.

CHRIST. 4. In respect of oracles, ordinances, officers, and order, thou, my church, art extremely beautiful in my view, and terrible to enemies around. And in respect to imputed righteousness, implanted grace, and holy conversation, thou, O particular believer, art transcendently comely, and thy assured faith and fervent prayer overcome every opponent. 5—7. Such was my delight in the vigorous actings of thy faith and love, and in thy importunate prayers, that I could no longer absent myself; and, being returned, I assure thee, for thy comfort, that thy holy thoughts and gracious exercise, thy unfeigned and operative faith, thy spiritual meditations, thy regular and active zeal, thy humility and self-abasement, together with all thy privileges, and everything belonging to my church, are as precious and comely as ever. 8, 9. Whatever beauties there be in earthly courts, there are none comparable to a true saint. In the one true church, nay, in one heavenly-begotten soul, there is more real comeliness than in all the world beside: all those of principal esteem, in either church or state, are disposed to express their approbation of it. 10. Gradual was the increasing light and glory of the church in her patriarchal, ceremonial, and gospel periods. Gradual and diversified is the growing comeliness and glory of every believer turned from darkness to light: they shine as the morning light, going on to perfection. In their borrowed and imperfect holiness they show fair as the moon; and in their imputed righteousness shine clear as the meridian sun; and, armed with the whole armour of God, they are terrible to every opposer. 11. Such is my regard to my church, that, even while absent from thee, I was occupied among my outwardly mean, but inwardly glorious and hidden ones, carefully observing if her fruitfulness in saints and in good works was answerable to her new covenant soil, and how her various members did thrive in the advanced progress or weak beginnings of grace. 12. And thy vigorous actings of faith, and fervent supplications, took such hold of me, that I was constrained, as in a surprising transport of affection, speedily to return to thee in loving-kindness and in tender mercies. 13. Notwithstanding every former offence, return, therefore, my perfect and peaceable one, by faith and repentance, to thy wonted familiarity with me, that I and my Father, and blessed Spirit, and ministering angels, may, with pleasure and satisfaction, behold thy beauties. However mean and worthless thou art in thy own eyes, yet how pleasant is it for me to behold Jews and Gentiles united into one society of saints, and to contemplate heavenly graces and holy duties withstanding and conquering the remains of inward corruptions, temptations, and fears!

Reflections upon Chap. VI.—The believer's hearty commendations of Christ are effectual, when blessed by him, to make others inquire after him. And it is prudent for deserted saints frequently and boldly to recognise the mutual relation betwixt Christ and their soul. Great is the mercy, that, though he often for a time deserts a particular favourite, he never totally forsakes his church and ordinances, and often does much good while it is little perceived. How sweet, and often surprising, are the returns of his sensible presence! For, unchangeable is his esteem of, love to, desire after, and delight in, his people, amidst all the changes of his countenance and providence. Engaging, honourable, and awful are the beauties of holiness, when they shine in churches, ordinances, and saints. And unbounded is Jesus' care about his people, and to have them fruitful in graces and good works. He takes delight to return them his sensible favours, and to see them cordially united among themselves, and valiantly contending with their spiritual enemies.

Chap. VII.—Ver. 1—6. Thou, O my visible church, art adorned with ministers shod with the animating preparations of the gospel of peace;—ministers fixed in the most noted station, and contributing to thy inward health and fruitfulness;—strong in grace, and confirmed in the truth, and set for the defence of the gospel;—intelligent in the mystery of Christ, and sagaciously watching against thy spiritual foes.—Thou art also adorned with manifold oracles and ordinances, for the spread of my honour, the communication of my influences, and edification of my people.—How beautiful, O heaven-born soul, are thy affections and conversation, through the powerful influence of gospel truth! Glorious are thy inward principles of holiness, and first motions to good, wrought in thee by the Holy Ghost! Thy gracious desires are supplied with nourishing influences from above! Plentiful provision, and fruitfulness in holiness, is obtained by the digesting of my word in a particular application of it! Living on the breasts of inspired oracles and instituted ordinances, how glorious and attracting are the exercises of thy faith and love, and of thy holy endeavours to edify others! A sure and precious defence is thy unfeigned and vigorous faith! Clear and distinct is thy spiritual understanding in the matters of God! Wonderful is thy gracious sagacity in discovering truth, and discerning between good and evil: and attended with courage and watchfulness, especially against the most near, constant, and malicious enemies! Grounded in my blood, and effectually productive of good works, is thy towering hope supported by thy faith! And acceptable in me is even the very smallest part of thy holy principles or practices! 7. So affecting is thy beauty, bestowed by myself, that I cannot but regard thy fellowship, and take pleasure to look on, and abundantly delight in thee.—When the whole of thy graces and holy conversation is considered in connexion, how comely, flourishing, victorious, and heavenly, is the appearance! And how cordial and cheering to me are thy affection and kind entertainment; 8, 9. In my purpose I resolved, and in my promise I have engaged, to manifest myself to my church, in converting nominal members, and vouchsafing my kindest fellowship to real saints.—This shall qualify thee to edify others, and give pleasure and satisfaction to me. Revived, refreshed, and comforted, by my influences, thy gracious discourse shall quicken and awaken others to taste of my love, and to open their mouths in my praise.

Believers. 10. O the inexpressible comfort which I enjoy in the faith of Jesus' relations, and in the intimations of his love to my soul! 11, 12. Beloved Redeemer and Husband, let me, retiring from the hurry and cares of this present world, have the most ravishing and permanent fellowship with thee! Let me, without delay, not only have a deep concern for the spiritual prosperity of the church, but have [§] The grammar of the passage suggests that the "daughters of Jerusalem," who speak, (ch. 1—5.) who are still present, (ch. 8. 4.) are here the solicitous projectors for the welfare of the "little sister." This emblem has been expounded of the Gentile church,—but it seems much more natural to understand by it—such as are yet "weak in the faith." Rom. 14. 1. & 15. 1. 1 Cor. 3. 2. Eph. 4. 13.—Ed.

[‡] This has generally been considered as the answer of the "little sister," exemplifying full and instantaneous "growth in grace." But as the grammar will not warrant any change from the speaker in the first person, (ver. 1. 2, 4.) and the speaker in the first person, ver. 10. this must be understood as the language of the bride, encouraging the "little sister" by her own experience of grace, and attainments in faith. —Ed.

an intimate and distinct knowledge of the condition of my own heart, and see whether my graces be weak or strong, flourishing or languishing. In this our retired communion will I discover the sincerity and fervency of my affection to thee. 13. While the precious, savoury, and medicinal truths of the gospel are to many a savour of life unto life; and while lively believers all around me begin to flourish and spread their heavenly influence; the inward graces of my heart show themselves in lively exercises; and everywhere new degrees of grace, and new acts of holiness, are added to the former: all which are, at thy command, set apart for promoting thine honour and service!

Reflections upon Chap. VII.—Extensive are the beauties of holiness in the church and people of God, and fixed and uniform in the substantials thereof. What delight Jesus takes in the persons and services of his followers! He is ready to hold the most intimate fellowship with them. And with ravishing pleasure they glory in him, and in his love towards them. When inwardly warmed by his love, how ready are they to relinquish everything else, in order to have familiar intercourse with him! And a deep concern for the church of Christ, and exact observation of our inward condition, effectually promotes our endeavours to honour him.

Chap. VIII. Believers.—Ver. 1. Blessed Redeemer, O that that happy period were come, in which thou shalt assume our nature, and be a member of our visible church, and, in consequence thereof, admit us to the most intimate fellowship with thee! Then, without regard to reproach or persecution, should I openly profess my reverence, subjection, and affection to thee. 2. Instructed by thy Spirit, I should spread abroad the knowledge of thee, in the extended gospel church, and all my gifts and graces should be employed to serve and glorify thee. 3. O the infinitely transporting, the intimate, the endearing, the strengthening and supporting fellowship that I should enjoy with thee! Nay, already the believing views of it fill my soul with the joys of my Lord! 4. Let me therefore once more charge you, my fellow professors, to do everything in your power to continue this my delightful communion with Jesus Christ, and do nothing to interrupt it.

Daughters. 5. What admirable person is this, who, forsaking all worldly things for Christ, and delivered from her distressed condition, mounts up heavenward, by faith resting on him to bear her up under every burden, and forward through every duty and difficulty?

Believers. O Jesus, animated by thy own delightful influence, I have, by importunate prayers, obtained the most sensible manifestations of thy love; as others, in whose hearts thou art formed by faith, have also done. 6, 7. O let thy most endeared esteem, remembrance, and love of my soul, appear remarkably in all thy dispensations towards me: for so vehement and irresistible is my desire after intimate fellowship with thee, that nothing else can afford me satisfaction: no, not death and the grave are so dreadful to me as the fears of thy withdrawment! Kindled by thy love shed abroad in my heart, my love to thee melts all my inward powers, and burns up my corruptions. No affliction, temptation, desertion, or persecution, can extinguish or abate it. Would the richest on earth tempt me from thee, with all his wealth, nay, with ten thousand worlds, I would utterly contemn and abhor the proposal. 8. But, Lord, we have many fellow sinners, chosen in and redeemed by thee; particularly among the Gentiles, who enjoy no ordinances, and are yet unripe for their spiritual marriage, being destitute of faith and love; what shall we do to promote their conversion, when the offers of thy grace shall be made to them?

Christ. 9. When, according to my unchangeable purpose, they shall be united to me as their foundation, I and my Father and blessed Spirit will endow them with manifold gifts and graces, and render them, in their hearts and church state, a firm tower and beautiful temple and palace for God. When the door of access to me shall be opened to them in the gospel, and the door of their heart opened to receive me, we, notwithstanding their insignificancy, weakness, troubles, and temptations, will thoroughly beautify, strengthen, and protect them.

Believers. 10. Indeed, blessed Redeemer, by thy infinite favour, I have been united to thee, and stand firm on thee as my foundation, and am come to some maturity and perfection in grace. 11. Thou, Lord Jesus, the infinitely wise and wealthy Prince of Peace, hast purchased by thy blood, planted and purified by thy grace, sown with thy word, and protected and managed by thy providence, the large vineyard of thy church. This thou hast committed to the care of thy gospel ministers, that they, by instructions, warnings, reproofs, and censures, might endeavour to their utmost to render the members fruitful in the works of righteousness, to thy praise and glory. 12. And, while the whole concerns of it are under thy special care, I have in charge the vineyard of my own heart, to watch over, defend, purge, and render fruitful in holy habits and exercises. Thou, Jesus, must have the principal honour of all that I am, have, or can attain to, and thy faithful ministers their subordinate share of my love and regard.

Christ. 13. Believing soul, who lovest and frequentest the assemblies of my people, and ordinances there dispensed, thy fellow members regard and listen to thy instructions and warnings for their edification. Let me, when withdrawn from thee, particularly in my bodily presence, often hear thy prayers and praises, and the publication of my gospel in the world.

Believers. 14. And, O my blessed Husband and Saviour, not only maintain frequent and familiar intercourse with my soul, and with thy church on earth, in the instituted ordinances of thy worship, but hasten, hasten thy glorious appearance without sin unto our salvation;—when we shall be caught up to meet thee in the air, and shall, in one complete body, enter that happy, that eternal state, in which God shall be all in all.

Reflections upon Chap. VIII.—How kind, how marvellous, is it, that God's only begotten Son, the brightness of his glory, has, by his assumption of our nature, become our brother, and will for ever continue bone of our bone, and flesh of our flesh! And great is the mercy, that to him the gathering of the Gentiles hath and shall be! It is pleasant to remember past experiences of his love in the assured expectations of others still more sweet! And delightful is the frame, ardent the desires, and fervent the prayers, when a soul is overwhelmed with the consolations of Christ! Importunate intercession for the spiritual welfare of others, often produces remarkable fellowship with him. Extensive revenues of holy thoughts, words, and deeds, are due from every member of the church, to Jesus Christ. And they who give him his due, will give his ministers theirs. But how strongly Christ and his people's hearts must be knit one to another! They cannot live but as it were in mutual intercourse. Soon will he come to take them to himself in glory; and, in the believing view of it, their waiting spirits cry, 'Even so; come, Lord Jesus.'

CONCLUDING REMARKS ON THE SONG OF SOLOMON.

Three points present themselves to the Christian reader and student, in the preceding book :—

I. Was this book received into the canon of Holy Scripture, and sanctioned by our Lord and his apostles? To this there can be but one answer—it was.

II. Are there, in the New Testament, any such evident references as form a key to its interpretation? Such evident references may be found, Mat. xxi. 33, when comp. with Song viii. 11; Eph. v. 27. comp. with Song iv. 1, 7; Eph. vi. 15. comp. with Song vii. 1; Rev. iii. 20. comp. with Song v. 2. Other references have been suggested, but these are so evident as not to admit of question.

III. Are there such quotations of passages of Scripture parallel to, or identical with, the Song of Solomon, by which its spiritual import can be unquestionably established? The answer to this question is easy and direct. (1) By referring to Heb. 1. 8. there is found a direct address from God the Father to God the Son. (2) That address is quoted from Ps. 45. 6. (3) It is impossible to overlook the complete parallelism, nay, identity of that Psalm, with the scenery and character of the Song of Solomon. Therefore, by following the Scriptural plan—comparing spiritual with spiritual—and the natural law of all interpretation—rising from what is plainly stated, granted, or ascertained, to what is less plain, questioned, or yet unknown, there can be no difficulty in coming to the conclusion, that the Song of Solomon forms a succession of emblems whereby the mutual love and union between Christ and his church are described for the instruction and comfort of believers.

That the Song of Solomon is capable of ready and great perversion, by "men of corrupt minds" is undoubted. For, whilst "to the pure all things are pure," so to the impure all things are impure. And such is the state of the carnal mind, that just in proportion as any object is good, in like proportion may it be perverted to purposes of evil. Thus—just in proportion as a medicine is powerful to restore, may its improper administration render it powerful to destroy. And thus grace, in its every form, may be turned into licentiousness. But is the sufferer, therefore, to be deprived of a powerful medicine?—or is the physician who discovered and prescribed it, to be pronounced an evil-doer? Is the sinner, therefore, to be deprived of access to pardon; and the God of all grace, and consolation to be disrobed of his attribute of mercy? No. And neither is the church of God to be deprived of some of the brightest pages in the divine word, because eyes that have "loved darkness" cannot perceive their beauties.

To those who have observed what a prominent place love to Jesus holds in the New Testament, (see for example, John 14. 23. 1 Cor. 16. 22. 2 Cor. 5. 14.) and to those who have experienced and rejoiced in "the assurance" of that love—the Song of Solomon will ever furnish a subject of study, at once most delightful and profitable.—Ed.

ADDITIONAL EDITORIAL NOTES ON THE SONG OF SOLOMON.

Chap. III. Ver. 11. In the day of his espousals, and in the day of the gladness of his heart.—The church restored to paradise, and uninterrupted communion with Father, Son, and Holy Spirit.

Chap. V. Ver. 2. Open to me, my sister.—The emblem of our Lord, standing at the door and knocking, and waiting for the opening of the closed door. Rev. 3. 20. ——Ver. 16. He is altogether lovely.—Independent of its inspiration, and its emblematic object, this description must present to the eye of an unprejudiced artist, an imagery of most unequalled range; the product of a mind fraught with universal information. Its chief topics of comparison are, (1) Colours; (2) Officered armies, ver. 10; (3) Precious metal; (4) Ornithology, ver. 11, 12; (5) Botany, ver. 13; (6) Jewellery, ver. 14; (7) Architecture; (8) Landscape, ver. 15; (9) Attractive eloquence, ver. 16. Every province of nature and art thus furnishing its tribute to the King, the "Lord of all!"

Chap. VI. Ver. 5. Turn away thine eyes.—That is, thine eyes suffused with tears from seeking and suffering. Ch. 5. 6, 7. see Ps. 116. 8.——Ver. 9. Choice one.—Separated one, even as every believer must be like his Lord, "separate from sinners."——Ver. 11. I went down.—The emblem here again to "the garden of nuts;" rather, of "rest or retirement."——Ver. 13. Shulamite.—The Hebrew feminine of Solomon; "the peaceful and the perfect."——The company of two armies.—The word Mahanaim is applied to the two bands into which Jacob divided his family, also to the two hosts of angels that he saw; (Gen. 32.) and may well represent the two bands of "Jews and Gentiles" in the church, (John 10. 16.) and the correspondent "ministering spirits sent forth to minister to them who shall be heirs of salvation." Heb. 1. 14.

Chap. VII. Ver. 1. The joints of thy thighs are like jewels, the work of the hands of a cunning workman.—"The mouldings of thy limbs are as ornaments, the workmanship of a skilful hand."

Chap. VIII. Ver. 11. Baal-hamon.—Ruler of multitudes. The keepers represent the rulers, and instructors of the churches in their multitudes.——A thousand.—As the annual rent for a vine seems to have been ordinarily a piece of silver; (Is. 7. 23.) the emblem indicates that return of "fruit of the Spirit," (Gal. 5. 22.) which is ever due in correspondence to privileges.——Ver. 13. Thou that dwellest in the gardens.—It is impossible by the grammar, to distinguish the speaker in ver. 13. from the speaker in ver. 14.; and as in ver. 14. she calls to the listener, my beloved, the speaker is the bride calling to her Redeemer, "Even so, come, Lord Jesus!" THE BOOK

OF THE

PROPHET ISAIAH,*

Who continued prophesying about sixty years with small success; chap. i. 1; and liii. 1. He was not the most ancient of the sixteen prophets; but his predictions, containing so much of Christ in them, are now placed first in order. The first thirty-nine chapters, except iv, xi, xii, xxvi, xxxii, xxxv. consist chiefly of divine indictments for sins and denunciations of judgments; the last twenty-seven, of promises relative to the deliverance from Babylon and to the gospel church. In chap. i—iii, v, vii—ix, xii, xxiv, xxvii. 7—11; xxviii—xxx. 1—17; xxxi. 1—3; lix, lxv, lxvi. is represented the ingratitude, unfruitfulness, idolatry, profaneness, female pride, oppression, drunkenness, perversion of judgment, &c. of the Hebrews; and the terrible punishments thereof, by the Assyrians, Chaldeans, Romans, &c. are predicted. In chap. vii. 5—9; viii. 4, 21, 22; ix. 8—21; xvii. is predicted the ruin of the kingdom of Syria and Israel, and the calamities of the Philistines; xiv. 29—31: of the Moabites; xv, xvi, xxv. 10: of the Egyptians and Ethiopians; xviii—xx: of the Arabians; xxi. 13—17: of the Edomites; xxi. 11, 12; xxxiv: of the Tyrians; xxiii: of the Assyrian army under Sennacherib; x, xiv. 24—27; xvii. 12—14; xxvii. 1; xxix. 5—8; xxx. 27—33; xxxi. 4—9; xxxiii: which is accomplished; xxxvi, xxxvii: of the Chaldeans; xiii, xiv, xxi. 1—10; xliii. 10; xlv. 1—4; xlvi. 1, 2, 11; xlvii. With those charges of guilt and predictions of judgments are intermingled many precious promises of the redemption and glorious kingdom of the Messiah; as i. 18, 25, 27; ii. 2—5; iv. 2—6; vii. 14; viii. 14; ix. 6, 7; xi, xii, xxv—xxviii. 16.—From xl. to the end, the deliverance of the Jews from Babylon, and the vanity of idols, are frequently hinted; but the incarnation, service, and glory of the Messiah; the erection of the gospel church; the calling of the Gentiles; the rejection and future restoration of the Jews; are the principal subjects. And on account of his clear and striking representations of Jesus Christ and his blessings, and of the gospel church, this prophet has been frequently styled a fifth Evangelist.

* In reading this and the subsequent prophets, great attention must be paid to rule X. of the Introduction, relative to the fulfilment of the same prophecy in different periods; and to history of nations, Chap. IV.

THE vision of Isaiah the son of Amoz, which he saw concerning Judah and Jerusalem in the days of Uzziah, Jotham, Ahaz, and Hezekiah, kings of Judah.

2 Hear, O heavens; and give ear, O earth; for the LORD hath spoken, I have nourished and brought up children, and they have rebelled against me.*

3 The ox knoweth his owner, and the ass his master's crib: but Israel doth not know, my people doth not consider.

4 Ah sinful nation,† a people laden with iniquity, a seed of evil-doers, children that are corrupters! they have forsaken the LORD, they have provoked the Holy One of Israel unto anger, they are gone away backward.‡

5 ¶ Why should ye be stricken any more? ye will revolt more and more: the whole head is sick, and the whole heart faint.

6 From the sole of the foot even unto the head there is no soundness in it; but wounds, and bruises, and putrifying sores: they have not been closed, neither bound up, neither mollified with ointment.

7 Your country is desolate,§ your cities are burnt with fire: your land, strangers devour it in your presence, and it is desolate, ‖as overthrown by strangers.

8 And the daughter of Zion is left as a cottage in a vineyard, as a lodge in a garden of cucumbers,* as a besieged city.

9 Except the LORD of hosts had left unto us a very small remnant, we should have been as Sodom, and we should have been like unto Gomorrah.

10 ¶ Hear the word of the LORD, ye rulers of Sodom; give ear unto the law of our God, ye people of Gomorrah:†

11 To what purpose is the multitude of your sacrifices unto me? saith the LORD: I am full:‡ of the burnt-offerings of rams, and the fat of fed beasts; and I delight not in the blood of bullocks, or of lambs, or of [a] he-goats.

12 When [a] ye come [b] to appear before me, who hath required this† at your hand, to tread my courts?

13 [c] Bring no more vain oblations; incense is an abomination unto me; [d] the new-moons and sabbaths, the calling of assemblies, I cannot away with; it is ‡iniquity, even the solemn meeting.

14 Your new-moons and your appointed feasts my [e]soul hateth: they are a trouble unto me; I am weary to bear them.

15 [f] And when ye spread forth your hands, I will hide mine eyes from you; yea, when ye §make many prayers, I will not hear: your hands are full of ‖blood.

16 ¶ [g] Wash you, make you clean;* put away the evil of your doings from before mine eyes; [h] cease to do evil;

17 Learn to do well; [i] seek judgment, †relieve the oppressed, judge the fatherless, plead for the widow.

18 [k] Come now, and let us reason together, saith the LORD: though your sins be as scarlet, they shall be as white as snow;‡ though they be red like crimson, they shall be as wool.

19 [l] If ye be willing and obedient, ye shall eat the good of the land:

21 ¶ How is the [n] faithful city become an harlot! [§] it was full of judgment: righteousness lodged in it; but now murderers.

22 [o] Thy silver is become dross, thy wine mixed with water:

23 Thy princes are rebellious, and companions of thieves: every one loveth gifts,† and followeth after rewards: they [p]judge not the fatherless, neither doth the cause of the widow come unto them.

24 Therefore, saith the Lord, the [q] LORD of EXPLANATORY NOTES. CHAP. I.—Ver. 2. Ye heavens and earth, and all that dwell therein, with astonishment know and bear witness that I have marvellously raised up, privileged, preserved, protected, and advanced this Jewish nation; and yet they have, on occasions, and in ways unnumbered, perfidiously violated my covenant, and rebelled against my commandments. 3. Brutishly ignorant and inconsiderate of everything important, they scarcely pay me and my ordinances the regard that cattle do to their owners and their stables. 4. Alas! the whole nation is polluted with, and guilty of, the most shocking and multiplied abominations! Unlike to their pious ancestors, they tread in the wicked steps of their immediate parents: they wax worse and worse themselves, and labour to render their posterity still more and more wicked. Revolting more and more from the service and worship of JEHOVAH their God, they have provoked his fearful indignation against themselves. 5. Further punishment of their sin with temporal calamities would but render them still more outrageous and obstinate in wickedness. Already corruption hath infected all ranks, the rulers and the ruled, without any proper means used to prevent it; and misery and distress have overwhelmed the whole nation. 7—9. The Israelites, Syrians, Assyrians, or others, have already, by fire and sword, desolated the whole country of Judah; and Jerusalem alone remains, and that in great danger and distress: and were it not from regard to a few righteous persons still left among us, the whole nation had been utterly destroyed by God in the most wrathful manner. 10—15. Be therefore assured, saith God, ye detestable monsters of wickedness, that, while ye indulge yourselves in your sinful courses, all your ceremonial services, however solemn and expensive, and even your prayers, amounting to nothing more than legal dissimulation, are utterly abominable, and do but more and more provoke me to wrath. 16—20. By faith applying the word, the blood, the Spirit of Jesus, for your effectual purification from sin, repent of, and turn from, your vices; and conscientiously exercise yourselves in the contrary virtues of piety, equity, and kindness.—In so doing, you shall not only find your most grievous iniquities, the murder of the Messiah not excepted, fully and freely forgiven, but enjoy a safe and happy continuance in your country. But if you remain obstinate in your evil ways, your destruction, by the sword of your enemies, is inevitable.——21—24. Jerusalem, once so famed for a faithful adherence to the laws and worship of God, and for the justice and integrity of its magistrates and people, has now apostatized to idolatry, and every other form of wickedness, and is filled with murders of innocents, saints, and prophets, and even of the Messiah. The practices of all ranks are quite corrupted, and their principles depraved, and even the oracles of God debased, by false glosses and human traditions. Magistrates, and other great men, are ringleaders in wickedness, conniving at, or protecting men in, dishonesty; giving sentence according as they are bribed; and suffering the poor, fatherless, and widows, who have nothing to give, to be oppressed without redress. Therefore shall JEHOVAH manifest his almighty power, which has been so long

(1) Glories of the last days: 1—5. (2) Causes of judgment: 6—9. (3) Warnings of judgment, teaching to "cease from man:" 10—22.

THE [a] word that Isaiah the son of Amoz saw concerning Judah and Jerusalem.

2 And it shall come to pass in the last days,[*] that the mountain of the LORD's house shall be [†] established in the top of the mountains, and shall be exalted above the hills; and all nations shall flow unto it.

3 And many people shall go and say, Come ye, and let us go up to the mountain of the LORD, to the house of the God of Jacob; and [b] he will teach us of his ways, and we will walk in his paths: for out of Zion shall go forth the law, and the word of the LORD from Jerusalem.

4 And he shall judge among the nations, and shall rebuke many people: and they shall beat their swords into plough-shares, and their spears into [*] pruning-hooks: nation shall not lift up sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more.

5 O house of Jacob, [c] come ye, and let us walk in the light[†] of the LORD.

6 ¶ Therefore[‡] thou hast forsaken thy people the house of Jacob, because they be replenished [§] from the east,[‖] and are soothsayers like the Philistines, and they [*] please themselves in the children of strangers.

7 [d] Their land also is full of silver and gold, neither is there any end of their treasures; [*] their land is also full of horses, neither is there any end of their chariots:

8 [f] Their land also is full of idols; they worship the work of their own hands, that which their own fingers have made:

9 And [g] the mean man boweth down, and the great man humbleth himself: therefore [†] forgive them not.[‡]

10 ¶ [h] Enter into the rock, and hide thee in the dust, for fear of the LORD, and for the glory of his majesty.

11 The [i] lofty looks of man shall be humbled, and the haughtiness of men shall be bowed down, and the [k] LORD alone shall be exalted in that day.

12 For [l] the day of the LORD of hosts shall be upon every one that is proud and lofty, and upon every one that is lifted up, and he shall be brought low; employed in acts of mercy to Israel, in utterly destroying these monsters who desperately hate and oppose him, and are a burden to his Spirit. 25—27. Part of the nation shall, nevertheless, be preserved and remarkably reformed by his power and grace. Magistrates and ministers, as in the days of Joshua and David, shall be active, upright, and faithful, and the people famed for righteousness in their dealings with men, and for their adherence to the covenant and worship of their God. Thus, through God's righteous execution of judgment upon his enemies, and chiefly through the satisfactory righteousness of his Son, shall his true worshippers, Jews and Gentiles, be delivered from corruption and misery. 28—31. But dreadful and general shall be the ruin of obstinate sinners, who continue in their rebellion against God, and contempt of his worship and Son. Their idols and groves, instead of preserving them, shall add to their confusion and misery.—Deprived of every delight and every enjoyment, they and their idols shall, in the most easy, irresistible, and remediless manner, be destroyed by the flaming vengeance of God, procured by their sins.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAP. I.—Prophets and ministers must always declare that will of God which themselves have seen and believed: and God often much diversifies the opportunities which he gives them to declare it. In the most awful manner both heaven and earth attests the importance of what he speaks, and the equity of what he inflicts. How horrid is ingratitude, notwithstanding mercies innumerable received! And shocking is the ignorance and thoughtlessness which are sometimes found among professors of the truth. When heinous corruptions become universal, inveterate, and highly aggravated, what can be expected but ruinous judgments, in which every act and form of wickedness will be resented! But desperate is their case who are hardened by both mercies and judgments, and to whom God ceases to be a reprover. It is a great mercy for a nation, universally ripe for ruin, to have but a small remnant of eminent saints. Thrice happy are they who are of the number, and are by free grace preserved from going to hell with the multitude. The greatest enemies to the power of godliness are often the most rigid observers of the form; and men will flee to their most costly devotions for relief, while they cleave to the sins which are the cause of their misery. But nothing is more abominable to God than indulged hypocrisy in our devotions. Indulged sin is so odious to him, that it renders all our prayers hateful in his sight.—What an extensive and laborious work is the real exercise of godliness! God, by the most gracious pardons, and the most full, though merciful, rewards, encourages us to it: and graciously he warns men before he strikes them with his judgments. But, alas! nothing is too horrid for apostate professors to commit. And injustice to men, especially the poor, marks magistrates and others as the detested enemies of God, whom he can easily destroy. Reformation and redemption are wholly the work of God through the blood of his Son. In his high sovereignty he redeems a remnant, when the bulk are permitted to perish in their sin. And no ruin is more certain and dreadful than of those who obstinately refuse and apostatize from Christ.

CHAP. II.—Ver. 2—5. In the apostolic and millennial periods, the firmly established, and never to be changed, gospel church, shall, in all kingdoms, be erected in the most visible manner; and multitudes shall, by the faith and profession of Jesus Christ, enter into it as members. They shall earnestly stir up one another to attend upon the ordinances, and learn and embrace the doctrines of salvation, which began to be published at Jerusalem. And by his conviction, conversion, and gracious government, Jesus Christ shall introduce spiritual peace and holy exercises, and even civil concord and virtuous industry, among the nations where murderous wars and idleness had long prevailed.—And may you, Jews, excited by your own preachers and by the Gentiles, cheerfully join yourselves, and partake of these blessed oracles, instructions, and comforts, of the Lord Jesus Christ. 6—9. Provoked by their confederacies, and by their mingling themselves with the Heathen; their imitation of the Chaldeans on the east, and Philistines on the west, in magic and divination; and by their insatiable heaping up of wealth, multiplication of horses and chariots, and of idols, and the worship thereof by all ranks; the Lord has rejected the Jewish nation, and will not suffer them to escape unpunished. 10—17. Notwithstanding all the possible efforts they may make to escape his indignation, the Lord shall glorify his own perfections in abasing them, however high in station, mighty in power, abundant in wealth and trade, or comely in appearance. 18—21. Convinced of the vanity of their idols, they shall renounce them, or, desperately flying from the judgments of God, shall cast them from them.

Happy that nation, and favoured of heaven, where children do not rule, but are ruled! and where godly women "guide the house," modestly confine themselves to domestic, pious, and charitable duties, "and give none occasion to the (ungodly) adversary to speak reproachfully." 1 Tim. 5. 14.—ED.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAP. II.—No dispensations of grace must be looked for after that which we at present enjoy. No oppression can hinder the flourishing of the church when the Lord rises up for her help: and no darkness nor error can hide her when Jesus manifests forth his glory. No remarkable fellowship with Christ must be expected but in the way of going upward. And it is comfortable that, amidst the present corruptions and contentions in the Christian church, we may look backward, in remembrance of mighty things done by the Lord; and may look forward, in hope of the church's still greater enlargement, purity, and peace. How delightful will it be when every one shall provoke his neighbour to learn the truths of Jesus, embrace his person, and serve him in the beauties of holiness!—But, alas! the guilt, the plagues which corrupt professors entail on themselves by intimacy with carnal and profane men, and even by their insatiable desire of that which is good in itself, or by inordinate dependence thereon! It is impossible, either by flight or resistance, to save either ourselves or our idols when God attempts to destroy. In order to glorify him, pride must be debased, and idols dethroned. And to wean or tear our affections from earthly things, the earth itself, and its works, must be dissolved or burnt up. But, alas! what havoc must be made before men can be affrighted from their idols! and what grace must be exerted before they penitently turn from them!

CHAP. III.—Ver. 1—7. These miseries came upon them, by the Syrians and Israelites under Ahaz; by the Assyrians, Chaldeans, Syro-grecians, and Romans. [See Introduction, chap. iv. section xviii.] By the sieges, and other judgments, they shall be deprived of the common necessaries of life, and all their men of ability, either for war, government, or trade, be cut off. Their governors shall be destitute of either sense or authority: every one shall behave in as unjust and insolent a manner as he pleases. And when any person, that has any property left him, shall be solicited to take the charge of the state, in order to prevent or retrieve its ruin, he shall absolutely refuse. 8, 9. And, indeed, their insolent defiance of God and his Christ to his face, by their words and deeds, have rendered their case desperately ruinous. By their impudent practising, and even boasting, of the most horrid abominations, they have not only ruined their country, but entailed upon their souls everlasting damnation. 10, 11. For, as those who are righteous, by faith in Jesus Christ, shall have their conversation in him graciously rewarded with spiritual and eternal blessings, so those who are wicked in their heart and practice, shall, here and hereafter, be miserably punished, according to their deserts. 12—15. So miserable is the condition of these Jews, whom I anciently took into covenant relation to myself, and who still profess to be my

* This alludes to the horrible custom still prevalent in all slave-dealing countries—that of exposing the slaves naked in the slave-market! Blessed be God! Britain has broken the chains of her slaves, and done what she might to wash out the record of her national guilt. But when will other nations, called Christian, repent, and follow her example! Grant the nations, O Lord, repentance unto life, lest thy judgments come as upon Jerusalem and Judah, and leave them desolate for their sins.—ED.

† The scanty dress of many semibarbarous nations,—while standing still, instead of moving in the march of improvement—may often be accurately ascertained and described; but the various dresses of civilized nations, exerting their free energies in agriculture, arts, and commerce, it is generally impossible to ascertain by the aid of names. In such communities the "fashion of the world soon passeth away." All conjecture as to these different portions of dress, is therefore avoided as useless; it is enough to see that riches and arts were grievously abused, and that the pride and vanity of dress, being idolatry, were grievously punished by personal degradations, and national ruin.—ED.

NOW will I sing* to my well-beloved a song of my beloved touching his vineyard. My well-beloved hath a vineyard in a very fruitful hill:

2 And he † fenced it, and gathered out the stones thereof, and planted it with the choicest vine, and built a tower in the midst of it, and also made a wine-press therein: and he looked that it should bring forth grapes, and it brought forth wild grapes.‡

3 And now, O inhabitants of Jerusalem, and men of Judah, judge, I pray you, betwixt me and my vineyard.

4 What could have been done more to my vineyard, that I have not done in it? wherefore, when I looked that it should bring forth grapes, brought it forth wild grapes?

5 And now go to; I will tell you what I will do to my vineyard: I will take away the hedge thereof, and it shall be eaten up; and break down the wall thereof, and it shall be § trodden down:

6 And I will lay it waste: it shall not be pruned nor digged; but there shall come up people, that the most foolish and weak govern and oppress them; their teachers and rulers decoy and lead them into wickedness and ruin. Therefore the Lord arises to avenge his oppressed poor ones, and to punish them who have seized upon their property, and cruelly abused and enslaved their persons.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAP. III.—In the most diversified shapes can God punish sin, and show the emptiness of creatures. And sins unrepented of certainly prove ruinous at last. But nations are evidently near to the most fearful destruction, when all ranks and sexes are abandoned to, and impudent in, sinning; or when folly and weakness are at the helm of government; when popular tumults dare to interrupt the administration of justice; and when those, who ought to be distinguished blessings in church or state, have become the principal plagues.—What a remarkable difference God puts between the righteous and the wicked! And who can either withstand or escape the vengeance which he appoints to them! With great faithfulness and courage ought ministers therefore to give both saints and sinners their portion. At what expense of money, care, and time, do many, especially women, hang out before the world the infallible tokens of their emptiness, pride, and whorish inclinations! And God often avenges their folly, by infamous usage, shocking disgrace, abominable appearances, loathsome diseases, pinching poverty, and desolating judgments.

CHAP. IV.—Ver. 2—4. Not only shall the fields yield abundant increase, but Jesus Christ shall shine forth in his glory; bring forth for, and communicate to, his chosen people, whom he has reserved for himself, the precious fruits of spiritual and eternal blessings:—while they, refined in the furnace of his judgments, justified by his blood, and sanctified by his Spirit, shall be remarkably sound in their principles, and holy in their hearts and conversations. 5, 6. And, as the Lord, by his pillar of cloud and fire, protected, refreshed, and guided, the Israelites in the wilderness, so shall he, by his blood, his power, his care, his glory displayed, protect his church.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAP. IV.—How often women's high decking, to procure themselves marriages, issues in contempt and impudence! But let the much despised Jesus, and his fulness, be ever precious to my soul.—Let his gracious election of me to everlasting life, be manifested in the sanctification of my nature and practice. Amidst manifold pollutions of my heart and nature, let me depend, for effectual purification, on his power and blood. And amidst every danger, let him, and JEHOVAH as reconciled in him, be our protection and comfort.

CHAP. V.—Ver. 1—6. God's people, the Jews, were placed in the fruitful land of Canaan, from whence he had cast out the hardened heathens. They were the chosen offspring of Abraham, fenced about by a covenant of peculiar protection, blessed with the knowledge of the true religion, and with a temple, altar, and the manifold ordinances thereof, and with every other external means of rendering them fruitful in good works. Instead of yielding the fruits of righteousness, to the praise of the glory of God, as might have been expected, they abandoned themselves to errors and immoralities; wherefore he will give up them, and all that they have, to be seized and destroyed by their enemies. briers and thorns: I will also command the clouds that they rain no rain upon it.

7 For the vineyard of the LORD of hosts is the house of Israel, and the men of Judah [a] his pleasant plant: and he looked for judgment, but behold [†] oppression; for righteousness, but behold a cry.

8 ¶ Wo unto them that join house to house, that lay field to field,[‡] till there be no place, that they may be placed alone in the midst of the earth!

9 [§] In mine ears, said the LORD of hosts, [b] Of a truth many houses shall be desolate, even great and fair, without inhabitant.

10 Yea, [c] ten acres of vineyard shall yield one bath, and the seed of an homer shall yield an ephah.

11 ¶ Wo unto them that rise up early in the morning, that they may follow strong drink; [d] that continue until night, till wine [e] inflame them!

12 And the harp and the viol, the tabret and pipe, and wine, are in their feasts: but they regard not[†] the work of the LORD, neither consider the operation of his hands.

17 Then shall the lambs feed [†] after their manner, and the waste places of the [d] fat ones shall strangers [‡] eat.

18 ¶ Wo unto them that draw iniquity with cords of vanity, and sin as it were with a cart-rope:[§]

19 That say, Let him make speed,[‖] and hasten his work, that we may see it; and let the counsel of the Holy One of Israel draw nigh and come, that we may know it!

20 ¶ Wo unto them [e] that call evil good, and good evil; that put darkness for light, and light for darkness; that put bitter for sweet, and sweet for bitter!

21 Wo unto them that are wise in their own eyes, and prudent [*] in their own sight!

22 [f] Wo unto them that are mighty to drink wine, and men of strength to mingle strong drink:

23 Which [g] justify the wicked for reward, and take away the righteousness of the righteous from him![†]

24 Therefore as the [‡] fire devoureth the stubble, and the flame consumeth the chaff, so their root shall be as rottenness, and their blossom shall go up as dust: because they have [h] cast away the law of the LORD of hosts, and despised the word of the Holy One of Israel.

25 Therefore is the anger of the LORD kindled against his people, and he hath stretched forth his hand against them, and hath smitten them: and the hills did tremble,[§] and their carcasses were [‖] torn in the midst of the streets. For all this his anger is not turned away, but his hand is stretched out still.

26 ¶ And he will lift up an ensign to the nations from far, and will hiss[‖] unto them from the end of the earth: and, behold, they shall come with speed swiftly:

27 None shall be weary nor stumble among them; none shall slumber nor sleep; neither shall the girdle of their loins be loosed, nor the latchet of their shoes be broken:

28 Whose arrows are sharp, and all their bows bent; their horses' hoofs shall be counted like flint, and their wheels like a whirlwind:

29 [k] Their roaring shall be like a lion, they shall roar like young lions; yea, they shall roar, and lay hold of the prey, and shall carry it away safe, and none shall deliver it.

30 And in that day[*] they shall roar against them, like the roaring of the sea: and if one look unto the land, behold darkness and [†] sorrow, [‡] and the light is darkened in the heavens thereof.

country shall be rendered desolate, without either ministers or magistrates to take care of them, and their fields quite barren and cursed. Errors, and immoralities too, shall everywhere abound among them, and all spiritual and comfortable influences shall be restrained.—14, 15. Multitudes of their nobles and merry revellers shall be hurled into the depths of death and damnation; and persons of every rank shall be debased or ruined. 16. But God shall manifest the glory of his power, holiness, justice, and truth, in the righteous punishment of these incorrigible sinners. 17. Dreadful shall be the ruin of those, who are so set upon their wickedness, that they spare no expense nor labour to commit it, and scornfully defy JEHOVAH to ruin them by his threatened and purposed judgments. 20. And of those who approve and plead for what is wicked; and condemn, hate, disparage, and persecute, what is good: 23. Or accuse and condemn the righteous as guilty; 24, 25. Therefore sudden and utter destruction shall seize upon them. 26—30. REFLECTIONS UPON CHAP. V.—All the privileges that we enjoy, whether temporal or spiritual, ought to be viewed as coming from God. And highly favoured are those whom he renders his visible church, and on whom he bestows the ordinances and influences of his grace. But how highly criminal and provoking is it to God, if, instead of eminent piety and virtue, they abandon themselves to the most abominable errors and corruptions! Corrupt professors will often go the most fearful lengths in impiety and vice, when left to their own hearts' lusts. Nothing is so base, so horrid, but they will become shameless and bold in it. But the most terrible woes are annexed to presumptuous sinning: and awfully correspondent to men's sins are the divine punishments thereof! While God glorifies himself, and protects his people, the disdainful imprecators of his judgments are often answered by the rapid, terrible, and ruinous, execution thereof. Let the British nation tremble, lest this chapter, which so plainly exhibits the mercies of God to them, and their sins against him, should have its threatenings verified in their utter destruction!

CHAPTER VI.

(1) A vision of the Lord of hosts: 1—4. (2) The prophet afraid, is encouraged, and commissioned to denounce judgment against the nation, and deliver a promise to a remnant: 5—13.

A. M. cir. 3246. B. C. cir. 758.

IN the year that king Uzziah* died I saw also the LORD sitting upon a throne, high and lifted up, and his train† filled the temple.

2 Above it stood the seraphims:‡ each one had six wings; with twain he covered his face, and with twain he covered his feet, and with twain he did fly.

3 And § one cried unto another, and said, Holy, holy, holy is the LORD of hosts: the whole earth is full of his glory.

4 And the posts of the ‖ door moved at the voice of him that cried, and the house was filled with smoke.

5 ¶ Then said I, Wo is me! for I am * undone; because I am a man of unclean lips, and I dwell in the midst of a people of unclean lips: for mine eyes have seen the King,† the LORD of hosts.

6 Then flew one of the seraphims unto me, ‡ having a live coal § in his hand, which he had taken with the tongs from off the altar:

7 And he laid it upon my mouth, and said, Lo, this hath touched thy lips; and thine iniquity is taken away, and thy sin purged.

8 ¶ Also I heard the voice of the LORD, saying, Whom shall I send, and who will go for us? Then said I, Here am I; send me.

9 And he said, Go, and tell this people, Hear ye indeed, but understand not; and see ye indeed, but perceive not;

10 Make the heart of this people fat, and make their ears heavy, and shut their eyes; ‖ lest they see with their eyes, and hear with their ears, and understand with their heart, and convert, and be healed.

11 Then said I, LORD, how long? And he answered, Until the cities be wasted without inhabitant, and the houses without man, and the land be * utterly desolate, 12 And the LORD have removed men far away, and there be a great forsaking in the midst of the land.

13 ¶ But yet in it shall be a tenth, and it shall return, and shall be eaten: as a teil-tree,* and as an oak, whose substance is in them when they cast their leaves, so the holy seed shall be the substance thereof.

* Many commentators think this chapter should be placed first, as they conceive the foregoing prophecies must have been delivered, at least, as late as the reign of Ahaz. That they describe the days of Ahaz, there can scarcely be a doubt; but that they were not delivered till then, there is no reason to conclude. In chap. 1. 1, they are expressly called "a vision, the nature of which is to describe things future as if they were actually accomplished: because they were visibly represented to the eyes of the prophet. The word also in this verse seems to affirm that the previous vision was in an earlier part of the reign of Uzziah.—ED.

CHAP. VI.—Ver. 1. Christ's train, or skirts, may denote his glorious influences filling his manhood or his church. 2. The winged seraphim, or burning ones, may denote angels, zealous, active, and humble, attendants of God, and his instruments in the dispensations of Providence; or zealous, active, and humble, ministers of Christ. Their covering their face denotes their inability to comprehend the glorious nature and mysteries of God; their covering their feet imports their being ashamed of their best services before God. 6, 7. The live coal taken from the altar, denotes the powerful, quickening, and heart-inflaming word of the gospel, as coming from, and through Jesus, as our atoning sacrifice. 9, 10. Go, warn this people of their dreadful danger in using the outward means of grace to their own hurt: go, and with the utmost diligence, instruct, exhort, rebuke, and threaten them; though abandoned by me to their own lusts, they will abuse all thy pains, to render themselves more stupid, careless, unteachable, and obstinate, and so effectually prevent their own forgiveness, conversion, repentance, or reformation. 13. Yet, notwithstanding the wretched case to which the Assyrians, Chaldeans, Syro-grecians, and Romans, shall reduce the nation, a remnant shall be preserved, who shall, in due time, be turned to the Lord. See Introduction, chap. iv. section xviii.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAP. VI.—O the infinite, the awful, the amiable, glories of our Immanuel. Thrice happy are his servants, who stand in his presence, and triumph in his praise! And blessed be God that his glory has, or shall fill the whole earth; and that faithful ministers, and established angels, vie with one another in his work.—Clear views of JEHOVAH's perfections effectually humble the very best of men, and make them to look on themselves, and all around them, as inexpressibly mean, loathsome, and guilty. And God, by such deep humiliation, prepares men for great honours! Thrice happy are those ministers, whom God has prepared for their work by the most humbling views of his glory, and the most powerful applications of his heart-cleansing and quieting promises! Great is the importance of a call to the ministerial office. And, alas! infinite is the hazard of such as without this, for the sake of honour or gain, treacherously pretend to be the ambassadors of Christ! But how dreadful is it when the clearest call, and the most faithful execution of it, do but issue in the aggravated wickedness and ruin of the hearers! Not the best of gospel ministrations can avail with sinners without the blessing of God, and the almighty operation of his Spirit. And if spiritual judgments begin, we may look for temporal to follow.—But blessed be God, that, for his own honour, and the preservation of the world, he still preserves a remnant of real saints, who, though in winters of adversity, seem dead, yet again revive as the corn, grow as the lily, and bring forth fruit to his glory.

CHAP. VII.—Ver. 4. Rezin and Pekah, and their armies and kingdoms, are called tails of smoking fire-brands, because, notwithstanding their present threatening to destroy all before them, they themselves were quickly to be extinguished in ruin. 7—9. REFLECTIONS UPON CHAP. VII.—To what alarming terrors, what murderous and destructive invasions and wars, does sin expose men! And while judgments ordinarily begin at the house of God, one guilty nation is made the scourge of another, and then quickly perishes itself! Severe, seasonable, free, and often unasked, are God's interposals for the relief and comfort of men. And if he be on our side, we need not fear the most furious adversaries. No plot, no attempt to frustrate his promises, can fail to issue in the sudden ruin of its authors. And the most proud and boastful are ordinarily the least successful in their enterprises. But faith in his promise is necessary to the establishment of our heart while they rage or reign. What kindness God shows to some wicked men for the sake of their ancestors, though with specious pretexts of regard they often refuse the favours of God, that they may depend on an arm of flesh! But with earnestness and boldness ought we to avouch the Lord for our God, when others refuse their claim. Amidst the deepest distress, infallible are the securities, and strong the consolations, which are derived from Jesus Christ, and his connexions with us. God easily finds instruments fitted to execute his vengeance upon obstinate sinners. And none are more readily chosen by him than those whom we have idolized, and confided on, in his stead. Yea, alas! terrible is the vengeance that falls at last upon corrupt professors. Their barrenness under the means of grace, and fruitfulness in wickedness, curse, blast, and desolate the very earth on which they live!

CHAP. VIII.—Ver. 6, 7. May either relate to the Israelites, who despised the now weak family of David; or to those Jews, who despised their own governors, and not content with their own weak armies, insisted upon calling in the Assyrian troops, and who rejected Christ.—The Assyrians are called the waters of the river, because they came from the river Euphrates in great multitudes, and wasted and destroyed the nations and countries whithersoever they came. 8. The Assyrian army ravaged the whole land of Judea in a rapid and resistless manner, (where Immanuel was born, lived, and died,) up to Jerusalem the capital. 9, 10. The Syrians, Israelites, and other enemies of God's church, may consult, confederate, collect, and march armies as they will, Immanuel her King shall make their attempts to issue in their own ruin. 12—15. Neither depend on the confederacy of Judah with the Assyrians or Egyptians, nor be terrified at the confederacy of the Syrians and Israelites, or any other, against Judah, but glorify the Lord, by a believing dependence on, holy fear, and sincere worshipping of, him: so shall he protect and comfort you, while multitudes of your brethren, through their rejection of him, and his Messiah, shall be insnared and ruined. 16—18. While but a few believers will understand, cleave to, and improve, God's revelations, I will, by faith, look for the fulfilment of them in the Lord's gracious return to, and favour towards, his people, and in the manifestation of his Son. And, lo, I and my son and disciples, as well as Jesus Christ and his people, are, and will be, amidst the admiration of some, and the derision of others, God's appointed pledges and tokens of his infallible fulfilment of his promises and threatenings.—19, 20. Should not we, in our distress, seek to our infinitely gracious, wise, and powerful God! Should we, who are living, apply for relief to dead idols or men, instead of the living God? No: God's word is the sole standard of our direction, instruction, and comfort; and if any direct otherwise, it is owing to their being destitute of all saving knowledge. 21, 22. And instead of prospering, they and their followers shall be driven from their dwellings, famished with hunger, and filled with anguish, till they curse their king, for calling in, or rebelling against, the Assyrians; and their idols for disappointing their hopes, and the true God for inflicting his judgments. And whether they look towards heaven, or earth, they shall see nothing but perplexity and trouble, and thus be reduced to despair.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAP. VIII.—Great is the importance of the oracles of God! Thrice worthy to be written in our heart!—But what changes, troubles, and wars, sin exposes men to in this world! Quickly they, who disturbed and spoiled others, are plagued in their turn. And who knows for what havoc the wealth, or the children we doat on, may be reserved. Men never refuse God's comforts, but they take up with ruinous plagues instead of them. Thrice happy is it, in days of distress, to be the property and people of the blessed Immanuel, and to have him the uplifter of our head, when the waters of trouble swell to the neck! To have him on our side, and his promise for us, will effectually crush every attempt that hell and earth can make against us.—But an almighty power is necessary to make even the best avoid fashionable evils, and disregard the fear and help of men, and depend only upon Christ! Safety, holiness, and honour, are fully to be found in him, but in him alone! For, alas! fearful is their destruction who reject and are offended in him! Great is the mercy, that in the worst of times he has so fixed his oracles in his church and in his people's hearts! And with pleasure may those, who have experienced the power thereof, wait for him, notwithstanding the most terrible troubles around, and loads of reproach upon them. Though God hide himself, and afflict his church, he will never leave her. But, alas! great is the folly and guilt, and tremendous the ruin, of those who consult with devils, with lusts, with wicked men, instead of Jesus, and his word, which is confirmed by his oath, and ratified in his blood!

CHAP. IX.—Ver. 1—7. The distress of Judah, under the Assyrian ravages or the Chaldean captivity, shall not be so dismal and lasting as the captivity of the ten tribes. They shall quickly be surprised with a glorious deliverance, a vast increase, amazing consolations, and perfect freedom from bondage: for God, to pave the way for the incarnation and kingdom of his Son, shall, not by the common forms of war, but by a fearful plague, destroy their Assyrian, or other enemies. And as God has debased Canaan by the repeated invasions of heathen troops, so he will glorify it by the instructive and comforting gospel ministrations of his Son and his apostles. Multitudes shall be converted to Christ, and great shall be their spiritual joy, freedom, and victories over their lusts, through the influence of the Holy Ghost; for the Son of God, born in our nature, and given to us, having all power given him in heaven and in earth, shall manifest himself in his wonderful excellencies, offices, and relations, in the erection and government of the gospel church; JEHOVAH's love to him and his people, and zeal for his own glory, shall secure the accomplishment of this.——8—10. The Lord has denounced a threatening against the Israelites, the accomplishment of which they shall quickly feel, who proudly boast that, though the Assyrians have demolished their houses, they will build better ones. 11, 12. The Lord shall stir up the Assyrians, together with the enlisted Syrians on the east, and the Philistines on the west, (who had lately assisted them against Judah) and they shall make an almost utter end of them: and after all, the judgments of God shall be further inflicted upon them. 14. The Lord will destroy multitudes of all ranks. 18. Their outrageous wickedness has fitted them for ruin, and shall be punished in the destruction of both small and great. 19—21. Amidst their terrible distress they shall restlessly plunder, oppress, and murder one another.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAP. IX.—God ordinarily tries men with lesser judgments before he inflicts such as are more severe. But it bodes well to a place when God sends to it the light of the gospel. And no load of adversity is so heavy, but Christ's presence can alleviate, and his power deliver from it. Thrice happy are those ignorant sinners whose minds he enlightens in the knowledge of himself! They may enjoy much solid and spiritual joy, freedom, and victory, even when they weep and lament. Unbounded are the excellencies, high the dignities, sweet the relations, and savoury the names of that Immanuel whom God has freely given to us sinful men! O the infinite zeal of JEHOVAH to honour his Son, and to promote the welfare of his church! Rejoice in these things, my soul—and again rejoice.—God shall make every opposer effectually to know the power of his wrath. But those ripen fast for ruin who continue proud and impenitent under great distress; and whom neither cords of love can draw, nor afflicting rods can drive to their duty. Hypocrisy towards God, and villany towards men, ordinarily meet together. And none are in God's sight more abominable miscreants than unfaithful ministers. But general concurrence in wickedness, issues in general calamities upon all ranks. And often they, whom we make our partners in sin, or in whom we have trusted, are made the distinguished instruments of our ruin.

CHAP. X.—Ver. 1—4. Dreadful shall be the punishment of you Hebrews, who make unjust laws, and pass unjust sentences, and who obstruct the course of justice, that such as are poor cannot have right done them. What will ye do when the Lord shall punish your nation by the desolating ravages of the Assyrians? Who will then assist you, or secure your power and wealth for you? Revolted from me, and deprived of my help, ye shall be rendered more miserable than others, who are taken captives or murdered.——5—11, 13—15. And dreadful shall be the ruin of the Assyrians, whom I have now appointed to punish you Jews for your hypocrisy and profaneness, by pillaging your country, and murdering and enslaving many of you. The Assyrian monarch, ignorant of my providence, merely intends to gratify his own lust of dominion; and boasts, that as he, by his own wisdom and bravery, has conquered many powerful nations already, and seized on their wealth, he will do the same to Jerusalem, let her God do what he can to resist him; since therefore, he, who is merely an instrument in my hand, thus insults me, 12, 16—19. Whenever I have sufficiently chastised my own people of Judah, I will punish his pride, and by a fearful plague, cut off most of his huge army in one night, commander and commanded together. 20—33. Then, as well as at the deliverance from Babylon, and in the gospel periods, shall the Jews be weaned from their carnal dependencies on Assyrians, Egyptians, or others; and shall, by faith and repentance, return to their Almighty God and Saviour. And, notwithstanding the vast numbers of Hebrews, a mere remnant shall survive the repeated desolations of their country, wherewith I have determined to punish them. 24—27. Fear not, therefore, ye inhabitants of Jerusalem, when the Assyrians shall ravage your land, and, like Pharaoh at the Red Sea, threaten to swallow up your whole nation. Quickly will I remove the tokens of my anger from you, in destroying the Assyrian army by a fearful stroke, similar to that by which the Egyptians were destroyed in the Red Rea, or the Midianites destroyed by Gideon. And in that day, from regard to my covenant of royalty with David, from regard to king Hezekiah, and chiefly from regard to the Messiah, will I completely deliver you from all subjection to them. 28—34. The Assyrians shall indeed, to the great terror of the nation, march up almost to the very walls of Jerusalem: but there will I, the Almighty conductor of armies, cut off by death most of Sennacherib's captains and valiant troops, and reduce his forest-like multitude to a despicable remnant.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAP. X.—Dreadful punishments, both in time and eternity, may those rulers expect, who make unrighteous laws, and who enrich themselves at the expense of the poor, the fatherless, and widows, whom God has taken into his peculiar protection! And fearful misery, and desperate anguish, await those who live without, or revolt from God; or who hypocritically profess to know him, and yet in works deny him. In a marvellous manner God makes the most insolent and atheistical tyrants the tools of his providence; and even over-rules their lusts, and mischievous purposes and conduct, in subservience to the glory of his perfections, and the welfare of his church! Alas! of what base robbery and bloody murder, do conquerors of this world make their boast! Their success makes them stupid, proud, and atheistical. But when God has finished his work by them, easily he brings them down, and makes their vanity and boasting issue in shame and disappointment. Let us then greatly fear that God with whom is so terrible majesty; who, after he has killed the body, can cast both soul and body into hell fire; and who, in a moment, can hurl the mightiest criminals into endless ruin! Alas! what multitudes are hurried into damnation by every national disaster! But God limits and regulates all the devastations which he makes in the earth, and causes the very providences, which ruin multitudes, to be the means of conversion and reformation to others.—And O how shortlived are his frowns against his people. How certain and sweet, and often sudden, their deliverances, through Jesus Christ and his anointing Spirit! Why then should they ever slavishly fear

AND there shall come forth a rod out of the stem of Jesse, and a Branch shall grow out of his roots.*

2 And the Spirit of the LORD shall rest upon him, the spirit of wisdom and understanding, the spirit of counsel and might, the spirit of knowledge and of the fear of the LORD;

3 And shall make him of quick understanding in the fear of the LORD: and he shall not judge after the sight of his eyes,† neither reprove after the hearing of his ears:

4 But with righteousness shall he judge the poor, and reprove with equity for the meek of the earth: and he shall smite the earth‡ with the rod of his mouth, and with the breath of his lips shall he slay the wicked.§

5 And righteousness shall be the girdle of his loins, and faithfulness the girdle of his reins.

6 The wolf also shall dwell with the lamb, and the leopard shall lie down with the kid; and the calf, and the young lion, and the fatling together; and a little child shall lead them.

7 And the cow and the bear shall feed; their young ones shall lie down together: and the lion shall eat straw like the ox.

8 And the sucking child shall play on the hole of the asp, and the weaned child shall put his hand on the cockatrice's den.

9 They shall not hurt nor destroy‖ in all my holy mountain: for the earth shall be full of the knowledge of the LORD, as the waters cover the sea.

10 ¶ And in that day there shall be a root of Jesse, which shall stand for an ensign of the people; to it shall the Gentiles seek: and his rest shall be glorious.

11 And it shall come to pass in that day, that the LORD shall set his hand again the second time to recover the remnant of his people, which shall be left, from Assyria, and from Egypt, and from Pathros, and from Cush, and from Elam, and from Shinar, and from Hamath, and from the islands of the sea.

12 And he [a]shall set up an ensign for the nations, and shall [b]assemble the outcasts of Israel, and gather together the dispersed of Judah from the four [c]corners of the earth.

13 [d]The envy also of Ephraim shall depart, and the adversaries of Judah shall be cut off: Ephraim shall not envy Judah, and Judah shall not vex Ephraim.†

14 [e] But they shall fly upon the shoulders of the Philistines toward the west;‡ they shall spoil [f]them of the east together: [g]they shall lay their hand upon Edom and Moab; [h]and the children of Ammon shall obey them.

15 And the LORD shall utterly destroy the [i]tongue† of the [k]Egyptian sea; and with his mighty wind shall he shake his hand over the river,‡ and shall smite it [l]in the seven streams, and make men go over [m]dry-shod.

16 And there shall be an highway for the remnant of his people, which shall be left, from Assyria; like as it was to Israel in the day that he came up out of the land of Egypt.

* This prophecy is distinctly applied to Christ, (Rom. 15. 12.) and cannot, as some have thought, refer to Hezekiah, for he was already born—neither were the Gentiles gathered to the church of God during his reign—an event distinctly predicted as occurring during the reign of the Branch, ver. 10. —Ed.

† This was remarkably exemplified in our Lord's unparalleled reproofs to the scribes and Pharisees, who appeared to the eyes of men fair without, but were yet as "whited sepulchres" full of rottenness within. (Mat. 23. 25—27.) and in the choice that he made of humble fishermen, who appeared to the eyes of men utterly unqualified for the spiritual conquest and reformation of the world, but who, nevertheless, have already achieved that work in part, and are, by their word and the Lord's good Spirit, achieving it still. the fury of the oppressor? When their nights of distress are at the darkest, they may cheerfully expect their deliverance to be near.

CHAP. XI.—Ver. 1—5. In a most weak and debased appearance, the Messiah shall spring from the family of David, when it is reduced to a very low and withered condition. And the Holy Ghost, bestowed on him above measure, and for ever secured to him, shall qualify him with ineffable wisdom and knowledge, courage and reverential awe of God: and he shall not judge of things according to external appearances; but with infinite exactness and equity shall he judge and save his own poor and afflicted people, and according to the threatenings of his word, he shall easily destroy his wicked opposers: and equity and faithfulness shall at once fit him for, and honour his ministrations. 6—9. Through the abundant spread of his gospel in the world, and the saving instructions of his Spirit, shall the most mischievous and untractable sinners of mankind be rendered meek, gentle, peaceful, and harmless. 10—16. And to him, as exhibited and offered in the gospel, shall multitudes of Gentiles come by faith, repentance, and daily worship: and his Spirit, by the effusion of his gifts, graces, and comforts, shall render his church eminently glorious. The Jews too, in the apostolic age, and especially in the millennium, when, by the power of God, they shall be brought back to their own land, shall, with united hearts, embrace the gospel, and assist in the conversion of the Gentiles to Christ, while opposers heathens, or antichristians, shall be destroyed, and every hinderance be removed.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAP. XI.—Come, my soul, behold the Lamb of God! Behold how he assumes my nature; is conceived and born of the virgin, in the likeness of sinful flesh, and laid in the manger! Behold him filled with the Holy Ghost above measure, and qualified to save his people to the uttermost, and avenge himself of his enemies! Behold how his almighty grace transforms the most outrageous sinners into the most amiable saints! See his gospel rapidly spreading in the earth, and his power and glory revealed in the hearts of men. See him in prophecy conquering all opposition, removing every impediment, slaying the enmity, and making of Jews and Gentiles one new man, so making peace! Let me believe, let me plead, let me hope, let me rejoice, that he, who has begun to fulfil these great and precious promises, will perfect the same in his time.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAP. XII.—How far the glories and comforts of the New Testament church exceed those of the Old! Weeping may endure for a night, but joy cometh in the morning. O the inexpressible pleasure of enjoying a reconciled

CHAPTER XIII.

The warning and doom of Babylon.

THE burden* of Babylon, which Isaiah the son of Amoz did see.

2 Lift ye up a banner upon the high mountain, exalt the voice unto them, shake the hand, that they may go into the gates of the nobles.

3 I have commanded my sanctified ones,† I have also called my mighty ones for mine anger, even them that rejoice in my highness.

4 The noise of a multitude in the mountains,‡ like as of a great people; a tumultuous noise of the kingdoms of nations gathered together: the LORD of hosts mustereth the host of the battle.

5 They come from a far country, from the end of heaven,§ even the LORD, and the weapons of his indignation, to destroy the whole land.

6 ¶ Howl ye; for the day of the LORD is at hand: it shall come as a destruction from the Almighty.

7 Therefore shall all hands be faint,‖ and every man's heart shall melt:

8 And they shall be afraid: pangs and sorrows shall take hold of them; they shall be in pain as a woman that travaileth: they shall * be amazed †one at another; their faces shall be as flames.

9 Behold, the day of the LORD‡ cometh, cruel both with wrath and fierce anger, to lay the land desolate; and he shall destroy the sinners thereof out of it.

10 For the stars of heaven, and the constellations thereof, shall not give their light: the sun shall be darkened in his going forth, and the moon shall not cause her light to shine.§

11 And I will punish the world‖ for their evil, and the wicked for their iniquity; and I will cause the arrogancy of the proud to cease, and will lay low the haughtiness of the terrible.

12 I will make a man more precious than fine gold;* even a man than the golden wedge of Ophir.

13 Therefore I will shake the heavens, and the earth shall remove out of her place, in the wrath of the LORD of hosts, and in the day of his fierce anger.*

14 And it shall be as the chased roe, and as a sheep that no man taketh up: they shall every man turn to his own people, and flee every one into his own land.

15 Every one that is found shall be thrust through; and every one that is joined unto them shall fall by the sword.†

16 Their children also shall be dashed to pieces before their eyes; their houses shall be spoiled, and their wives ravished.

17 Behold, I will stir up the Medes against them, which shall not regard silver; and as for gold,‡ they shall not delight in it.

18 Their bows also shall dash the young men to pieces; and they shall have no pity on the fruit of the womb; their eye shall not spare children.

19 ¶ And Babylon, the glory of kingdoms, the beauty of the Chaldees' excellency, shall be as when God overthrew Sodom and Gomorrah.

20 It shall never be inhabited, neither shall it be dwelt in from generation to generation; neither shall the Arabian pitch tent there; neither shall the shepherds make their fold there:

21 But wild beasts of the desert shall lie there; and their houses shall be full of doleful creatures; and §[a] owls shall dwell there, and satyrs‖ shall dance there.

22 And *the wild beasts of the islands shall cry in their †desolate houses, and dragons in their pleasant palaces: and [b]her time is near to come, and her days shall not be prolonged.

From Ps. 19. 6, it appears that the "ends of heaven" signify the sun's apparent daily and annual course, and whoever considers the wonderful collection of adventurers from all nations that are gathered to armies, but especially to Eastern armies, where mercenary foreigners often constitute their greatest strength, will find little difficulty in understanding how literally and truly the prophet here speaks.—Ed.

God as our ALL and IN ALL! If he be ours, we may safely trust him with all our happiness, all our work, all our care. If he be our strength, no foe can hurt us. If he be our salvation, eternity is too short to speak his praise. Great is the happiness, temporal, spiritual, and eternal, which we may by faith draw from his perfections, his Christ, his promises, and ordinances! And thrice happy is the church when her members know him and his mighty works, and with one mind, and one mouth, glorify him!

CHAP. XIII.—Ver. 1. Prophecies of heavy, oppressive, and ruinous judgments, are often called burdens; and those denounced against Babylon also often relate to Antichrist. 2, 3. Assemble the forces to their respective standards.—Order them to present themselves to the noble captains of Media and Persia, and to break into the houses of the noble Chaldeans. I have stirred up, and by my providence separated and strengthened these Medes and Persians, to execute my judgments upon Babylon, and to perform the most gallant actions, which will illustrate my honour and greatness. 6, 9. The day of the Lord, or of the wicked, denotes the period of his awful judgments upon them. 10. The whole country of Chaldea shall be filled with horror, and their princes and nobles degraded or murdered. 12. Men fit to bear arms shall become very rare; or the Medes and Persians shall refuse every ransom of their lives. 13, 14. Because of their wickedness, the whole nation shall be quite unhinged and ruined. The Chaldeans shall flee for their lives; but none shall dare to harbour them. All their auxiliaries shall run away, and leave them to shift for themselves. 19. Babylon, once the so large, glorious, and impregnable capital of Chaldea, shall be utterly destroyed in the most wrathful manner.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAP. XIII.—Alas! how oppressive and destructive are the judgments of God upon guilty nations, or even the threatenings thereof! Nor is there any destruction on earth but the Lord is the manager of it. He sets apart the instruments of his wrath, as well as those of his grace. He can raise mighty armies by his call or by his nod; and with alacrity they march, under his encouraging direction, to execute his judgments. How dreadful is it when the terrors of a guilty conscience are added to the heavy judgments of affliction! The hearts and hands of the mightiest fail them, when JEHOVAH appears against them in his vengeance; and all helpers desert when God devotes a nation to ruin. Into what savage devils has sin transformed men, especially when they serve in conquering armies! But God is righteous in returning men's cruelties upon themselves. He has exhibited the most terrible marks of his indignation against sin on persons, cities, and nations. And the ruins of places, once famous and wicked, attest his infinite holiness, equity, fore-knowledge, and faithfulness, and the divine authenticity of his word.

The ruin of Moab.

3 In their streets they shall gird themselves [d] with sackcloth: on the tops of their houses,† and in their streets, every one shall howl, ‡ weeping abundantly.

4 And Heshbon shall cry, and Elealeh; their voice shall be heard even unto Jahaz: therefore the armed soldiers of Moab shall [e] cry out; his life shall be grievous unto him.

5 My heart shall cry out for Moab; [f] his fugitives shall flee unto Zoar, an heifer of three years old: § for by the mounting ‖ up of Luhith with weeping shall they go it up; for in the way of Horonaim they shall raise up a cry of [g] destruction.

6 For the waters of Nimrim shall * be desolate: for the hay† is withered away; the grass faileth; there is no green thing.

7 Therefore the abundance they have gotten, and that which they have laid up, shall they carry away to the [h] brook of the willows.

8 For the cry is gone round about the borders of Moab; the howling thereof unto [i] Eglaim, and the howling thereof unto [k] Beer-elim.

2 §For it shall be, that as a wandering bird [b] cast out of the nest, so the daughters of Moab shall be at the fords of Arnon.

4 Let mine outcasts dwell with thee, Moab; be thou a covert to them from the face of the spoiler: for the †extortioner is at an end, the spoiler ceaseth, ‡the oppressors are consumed out of the land.§

5 And in mercy shall the throne be ‖ established; and he shall sit upon it in truth in the tabernacle of David, judging, and seeking judgment, and hasting righteousness.*

8 For the fields of Heshbon languish, and the vine of Sibmah: the lords of the heathen have broken down the principal plants thereof; they are come even unto Jazer, they wandered through the wilderness: her branches are §stretched out, they are gone over the sea.

9 Therefore I will bewail with the weeping of Jazer the vine of Sibmah: I will water thee with my tears, O Heshbon, and Elealeh; for ‖the shouting for thy summer-fruits and for thy harvest is fallen.*

10 And gladness is taken away, and joy out of the plentiful field; and in the vineyards there shall be no singing, neither shall there be shouting: the treaders shall tread out no wine in their presses; I have made their vintage shouting to cease.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAP. XIV.—How strangely nations rise and fall in the scales of God's providence! But a pleasant aspect, towards the saints, have all the clouds of wrath that hang over their adversaries. And the overthrow of nations directs men to Jesus and his church. Great is the instability of earthly honours, power, or wealth. Such as were masters one day, are often slaves to their slaves the next.—All our salvation must be ascribed to the rich and sovereign mercy of God. It is his election of grace, not our free-will, that can bring us to the inheritance incorruptible and undefiled. And ever certain, however slow, is the deliverance of his chosen, his church, from all their griefs, fears, and toils. But to what fearful misery and disgrace are proud and powerful oppressors reduced at the last! Neither power nor wealth profit in the day of his wrath. Both God and men take pleasure in humbling and debasing the proud. But if haughty tyrants sink to ruin—to damnation,—with such cruel derision,—in what fearful forms shall devils and damned heathens welcome to hell the proud despisers of Jesus Christ! Great is the misery which the wickedness of parents entails upon their impenitent posterity, and the marks of wrath which sinners fix upon the spots where they lived. Stable, and infallibly executed, are the purposes of God. And it is vain for his enemies to hope for exemption from ruin; for if one foe be cut off, he can raise up a worse. But, amidst all the commotions on earth, fixed is his church, and safe the poorest of her members. JEHOVAH is her founder, foundation, protector, and refuge.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAP. XV.—Destruction and anguish, in tremendous triumph, follow sin through impenitent cities and nations. Sudden and unexpected ruin awaits haughty transgressors. And to call on idols, or creatures, when God is our enemy, is but to add to our anguish. The wealth which men eagerly gain but invites the invader, tempts the robber, and endangers the owner. It increases the owner's care and grief, while it assists his enemy to destroy him, and if hardened sinners escape one judgment, they are reserved for another. But if such be the case of a ravaged nation, alas! the terrors, the torments, the howlings, in hell! Who shall abide with devouring fire? Who shall dwell with everlasting burnings?

(2 Kin. 16. 9); and to what ruinous condition it was then reduced, and how long it remained so, history gives no information. It has, however, still continued a city of great note and importance; but that fact forms no contradiction to the prophecy, as it is evident from ver. 3, that by "being a city," the prophet meant the capital city of a Syrian monarchy. But to that estate it never returned; for since the death of Rezin, its last king, the country around Damascus has always continued a mere province of some of its conquerors. These have successively been Sennacherib, whose capital was Nineveh, (2 Kin. 19. 36.) [*] This phrase Vitringa interprets of the mountains that enclose Egypt; Scott, of the protection that Israel foolishly expected from Egypt. Is it not rather to be interpreted of the wings of an invading army, as the word wings is used chap. 8. 8?—ED.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAP. XVI.—How unwilling is God that any should perish, but that all should come to repentance! Injustice towards God or men is a ready mean for depriving us of all we have. Never do any protect or cherish the people of God in their distress, but he remarkably rewards them in kind.—Nor is it ever wise to stand aloof from them; for though they fall, they shall quickly arise: though now they wither, anon they shall flourish in glory and honour. When sin abounds, rage against the church flames, and pride towers, destruction and anguish are at the door; and carnal mirth shall quickly be turned into weeping and wailing. And when God rises up to punish the guilty, no idol can help, avert, or defer, his stroke.

CHAP. XVII.—Ver. 3—5. The Syrians shall be in as despicable and ruined a condition as the Israelites; and the glory and multitude of Israel shall be exceedingly diminished, like one dying of a consumption. And, being ripe for ruin, the Assyrians shall make a clean riddance of them, as reapers in harvest do of the fields of standing corn. 9—11. The cities of the Israelites shall stand as high heaps in the country, forsaken by the inhabitants, as they were by the Canaanites in the days of Joshua or Barak. Because they have forsaken their God, Saviour, and Protector, nothing shall thrive with them; but after all their care to strengthen their state, the Assyrians shall seize everything they have, and carry them into a miserable and lasting captivity. 12—14. But notwithstanding all their vast multitudes, fury, noisy ravage, and blasphemous boasting, God, by his wrathful rebuke, shall destroy the Assyrian army before Jerusalem, and make the small remains thereof flee homeward with the utmost terror and precipitation.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAP. XVII.—Companions in wickedness are soon made partners in punishment. Nor can the strongest fortifications defend from God's almighty wrath. Sin fearfully sickens and consumes persons and societies. And when nations are ripened by it, easily and extensively God strips them of their numbers, glory, power, and wealth. But thrice happy is it when the destruction of many is rendered instrumental for the conversion of a remnant to Christ, and when the loss of outward things makes us look off from them all to God himself. Alas! how professors, by their forgetfulness of God, ruin themselves and their country, and turn their most noted outward comforts into real plagues! But puny and empty nothings before God are the mightiest armies of his adversaries. He triumphs over those in his judgments who triumph over his people in their wickedness. And shortlived are the terrors or troubles of his chosen. Weeping may endure for a night, but joy cometh in the morning. Let them therefore treasure up past experiences as a ground of future confidence in the like temptations.

CHAP. XVIII.—Ver. 4. God's being like a clear heat, or a cloud of dew, may either be understood of his afflicting, or of his comforting them. 5, 6. Before they can ripen their designs, I will give up multitudes of them to destruction, and their unburied carcasses to ravenous fowls and beasts of the earth.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAP. XVIII.—No place can protect sinners from an angry God. No furious rage, which may render them a terror to their neighbours around, can hinder him from debasing them. His providential interpositions ought carefully to be remarked: and when dangers are most alarming, he is often nearest to defend and save us. No rage of his enemies can ever disturb his repose. Often he seems to have forgotten his people when he is just ready to work their deliverance. And while he is all-sufficient for the protection, quickening, and comfort of his people, he can reduce the mightiest nations to ruin, or convert them to Christ, as he pleases.

Sennacherib's army, and by Alexander's victories, delivered them from their Assyrian and Persian oppression, Jesus, the infinitely mighty Saviour, shall deliver them from Satan, and their lusts, and their heathen abominations. By God's wonderful providences they shall be gradually brought to the saving knowledge of, and openly worship him, and solemnly and candidly devote themselves to his service. And in the apostolic, and especially the millennial period, they, and the eastern nations, who had warred with and oppressed them; and the Jews, who had sinfully courted and been sadly oppressed by both, shall harmoniously embrace the gospel, and unite in the service and distinguished favours of God.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAP. XIX.—God pours the greatest contempt on men's idols; on everything which they inordinately loved or trusted. At his will created comforts concur to aggravate our ruin, and created supporters fail or fight against us. Fomenters of faction, cruel tyrants, and infatuated and giddy princes, are the greatest plagues to nations. And when one sinner, or sinful society, is cut down, it becomes survivors to consider and tremble. If men persist in their wickedness, God is determined to destroy them. But strange, and often unaccountable to us, are his providential dispensations. He often deals most sharply with those for whom he has the greatest mercies in reserve. Deeply he wounds, in order that he may graciously heal. He bereaves men of all that they have in this world, that he may give them his gospel, his covenant, his ordinances, his Christ. He can form the most glorious, intelligent, devout, and harmoniously bold, societies of believers out of those whom Satan had singularly besotted, sin corrupted, and miseries depressed. And it is comely when the servants of the same God, purchased by the same blood of his Son, and begotten by the same Spirit, lay aside all their animosities, and with one heart, one mind, and one mouth, glorify God!

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAP. XX.—O what need of a self-denying humility in the ministers of Christ! They know not to what apparently debased service he may put them. Into what pitiful conditions men's wickedness plunges them! Alas! the dreadful nature of slavery, and captivity to inward lusts! How created confidences shame, pain, and ruin us at last! But thrice happy are those who in time flee from them all to the never-disappointing Jesus Christ!

CHAP. XXI.—Ver. 1, 2. Dreadful calamities shall come upon Babylon on the river Euphrates, which shall reduce it to a desert and fen. Irresistibly they come from Media and Persia, between which and Babylon the wilderness is inhabited by fierce savages. sents the afflicted Jews, as having this prophecy delivered to them for their comfort; or the Chaldeans, as threatened with terrible destruction after they had miserably destroyed the Jews and others. 11, 12. To the affrighted Edomites no other information can be given, than that a night of dreadful calamities, by the Assyrians, Chaldeans, &c., shall follow their present respite and prosperity. Nor is there any method to escape it, but by a penitent turning to God and his people.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAP. XXI.—Alas! what desolations in populous nations, what alteration in fruitful soils, does sin produce! Quickly they, who treacherously spoiled and murdered others, meet with the same fate. And often the most dreadful ruin comes upon sinners when they are most secure and self-confident. How useful and informing are God's faithful ministers! and what insight they ought to have into the mind and work of God! It is very necessary to discern the signs of the times; and to consider earthly prosperity as but a common inlet to fearful calamities; that we may improve the present hour for returning to God. Kindness to distressed neighbours is ordinarily, by providence, rewarded with similar reliefs. But how empty is that glory which can be diminished or ruined! Let therefore the Lord alone be my everlasting light, wealth, and honour.

CHAP. XXII.—Ver. 1—3. The heavy judgments of Jerusalem, which is surrounded with mountains, and favoured with God's revelations and ordinances. Ye inhabitants, what is become of all your former security and confidence when ye made light of God's threatenings, that ye are gone to the house-tops to view the approaching army, or to hide yourselves? There is now nothing but doleful outcries and confusion, instead of the wonted shouts of mirth. The men of war die by famine and pestilence, or by their own fears. The rulers have fled; but being overtaken, they and others are chained for prisoners. 6. The Persians and Medes served in the Assyrian and Chaldean armies. 8—14. When Sennacherib had dismantled the fortified cities of Judah, he provided armour, repaired your walls, or built new ones, pulling down part of the houses for that purpose, and conveyed all the water into the city; but ye never applied, by prayer or fasting, to God who formed your city, but instead thereof, spent the little time you had reason to expect, in profane revelling and mirth; which impudent contempt of God and his judgments shall never be forgiven you. 15—19. And you, Shebna, what property or relations have you, a foreigner here, that you should build a stately palace or tomb for yourself? Behold, God shall, in an irresistible manner, drive you into that I will call my servant Eliakim, the son of Hilkiah:

21 And I will clothe him with thy robe, and strengthen him with thy girdle, and I will commit thy government into his hand; and he shall be a father to the inhabitants of Jerusalem, and to the house of Judah.

22 And the key of the house of David will I lay upon his shoulder: so he shall open, and none shall shut; and he shall shut, and none shall open.[e]

23 And I will fasten him as [x] a nail in a sure place;[†] and he shall be for a glorious throne to his father's house.

24 And they shall hang upon him all the glory of his father's house, the offspring and the issue, all vessels of small quantity, from the vessels of cups, even to all the [‡]vessels of flagons.

25 In that day, saith the LORD of hosts, shall the nail that is fastened in the sure place be removed,[§] and be cut down, and fall; and the burden that was upon it shall be cut off: for the LORD hath spoken it.

CHAPTER XXIII.

The fall of Tyre.

THE burden of Tyre. Howl, ye ships of Tarshish;[a] for it is laid waste, so that there is no house, no entering in: from the land of Chittim[†] it is revealed to them.

2 Be still, ye inhabitants of the isle; thou whom the merchants of Zidon, that pass over the sea, have replenished.

3 And by great waters the seed of Sihor, the harvest of the river, is her revenue; and she is a mart of nations.

4 Be thou ashamed, O Zidon; for the sea hath spoken, even the strength of the sea, saying, I travail not, nor bring forth children, neither do I nourish up young men, nor bring up virgins.

5 As at the report concerning Egypt, so shall they be sorely pained at the report of Tyre.[b]

6 Pass ye over to Tarshish; howl, ye inhabitants of the isle.

7 Is this your joyous city, whose antiquity is of ancient days? her own feet shall carry her [†]afar off to sojourn.

8 Who hath taken this counsel against Tyre, the crowning city, whose merchants are princes, whose traffickers are the honourable of the earth?

9 The LORD of hosts hath purposed it, [a]to stain the pride of all glory, and to bring into contempt all the honourable of the earth.

10 Pass through thy land as a river, O daughter of Tarshish: there is no more [b]strength.

11 He stretched out his hand over the sea; he shook the kingdoms: the LORD hath given a commandment [‡]against [c]the merchant-city, to destroy the [§]strong holds thereof.

12 And he said, Thou shalt no more rejoice, O thou oppressed virgin, daughter of Zidon: arise, pass over to Chittim; there also shalt thou have no rest.

13 Behold the land of the Chaldeans; this people was not till the Assyrian founded it for them that dwell in the wilderness: they set up the towers thereof, they raised up the palaces thereof; and he brought it to ruin.

14 Howl, ye ships of Tarshish: for your strength is laid waste.

[a] Ancient Tyre was situated on the eastern shore of the Mediterranean, about 25 miles south of Sidon; New Tyre, on an island, about half a mile from the land: for upwards of 300 years it was justly considered the commercial capital of the world. Yet, when at the height of prosperity, its destruction was foretold by Ezekiel, (26—28.) as well as by Isaiah. Yet, how unlikely was its ruin! It was a place of prodigious strength, so that it successfully withstood Shalmaneser king of Assyria during a siege of five years; and was not taken by Nebuchadnezzar till after a siege of thirteen years. The island city had walls 150 feet high; but was taken by Alexander after a siege of seven months, and reduced to a state of utter ruin. It subsequently recovered a portion of its prosperity; but has long been what Ezekiel foretold, "as the top of a rock, a place to spread nets upon." Jameh estimates the present inhabitants of New Tyre at about 4000. The ancient city is a total ruin.—Ed.

captivity, and overwhelm you with shame and contempt. In a distant country thou shalt live and die obscurely; and your stately chariots, and other marks of honour, shall remain, to the reproach of king Ahaz, who preferred so worthless a wretch. 20—24. Eliakim shall be advanced into thine office, and tenderly govern the people. He shall have the supreme government of the king's court and family, and dispose of everything belonging to them. He shall be established in his office; and by his prudent carriage, shall procure respect to himself and his relations: all of whom, from the highest to the lowest, shall be advanced by him, and own their dependence on him. 25. But you, Shebna, who now appear so firmly fixed in honour, shall then be disgraced and ruined, and all your dependents along with you.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAP. XXII.—How unbounded is the knowledge of God! Not a motion in our course, not a word in our tongue, not a thought in our heart, but he knows it long beforehand! How severe are God's corrections of his own professed people! Pious men, and especially faithful ministers, will be distinguished patterns of grief for public calamities, and of eyeing the hand of God therein. In times of peace many things lie quite neglected. And even in danger, many mind nothing but external means of relief, atheistically overlooking God himself. Nor can the best of rulers reform the hearts of their subjects. Luxury leads to infidelity. But how dreadful is it when professors riot in revellings and mirth, when God is calling them to uncommon humiliation for sin! Alas! such luxurious feasts and frothy songs issue in everlasting damnation! It is very rash for court favourites to pride themselves in their station, or to tyrannize over others. God may suddenly displace and debase them. Preferment is only honourable when it is obtained unsought for, and when it is wholly improved to the glory of God, and the benefit of mankind. It is a great mercy for churches and nations, to have men prudent, active, and faithful, in the principal places of government, especially after almost everything has been mismanaged by others. And above all, infinite is the mercy of JEHOVAH, in setting up Jesus Christ a Saviour to restore what he took not away; and that he has intrusted him with the whole concerns of his own glory and of our eternal happiness!

CHAP. XXIII.—Ver. 1—5. Those concerned in the ships of Sicilia, the south parts of Spain, and other sea-ports, shall grievously bewail the extensive destruction of Tyre, as the harbours, and places of entertainment and commerce there, shall be all destroyed by the Chaldeans or Greeks, and part of the inhabitants carried captive; of which they shall be informed by the people with whom they trade. There shall be nothing but mournful silence and desolation in Tyre, which had been lately filled with mariners, merchants, and goods; filled with the corn and other commodities of Egypt; and resorted to by all the trading nations of the known world. Zidon, her parent and neighbouring city, shall be quite overwhelmed with confusion, because Tyre, long the mistress of the sea, instead of sending forth her colonies, shall be bereaved of her inhabitants. And the ruin of Tyre shall be no less alarming to the Egyptians, and other neighbouring nations, than the destruction of Egypt by Moses, or by the Ethiopians or Assyrians, &c. 6, 7. Notwithstanding her antiquity, and wonted gaiety and mirth, the inhabitants of Tyre shall, in great anguish and grief, leave their own country, and flee for shelter to Lesser Asia, Spain, or the north of Africa. 8, 9. Nor shall all their glory and wealth be able to prevent their ruin, since God has determined to pull down their pomp and magnificence, as a warning to others. 10. Their fortifications and armies being ruined, the inhabitants of Tyre, long supported by their sea trade, shall be glad, in multitudes, swiftly to flee from their country, never to return. 11, 12. It is God who, to the terror of the nations around, employs the Chaldeans or Greeks to destroy it; and, though never conquered since it was founded by the Zidonians, it shall now be destroyed. Nor shall the inhabitants, carried captive to Chaldea or Greece, or who flee to other places, obtain there any fixed safety or quietness. 13. Nor need the Tyrians think the ruin of their city impossible. The Chaldeans, so anciently formed into a nation by Nimrod, and lately re-established by Baladan an Assyrian prince, shall, after all their fortification of Babylon their capital, and their conquest of nations, bring them, and then be brought themselves, to ruin. 15—17. And after the Tyrians have been deprived of their trade for seventy years, answerable to the continuance of the Chaldean monarchy, the Lord shall restore them to their wonted liberty; and they shall, by every engaging art, draw the nations to trade with them as formerly. 18. At last the Tyrians shall, in the apostolic age, be converted to the faith of Christ, and shall employ their power and wealth to promote his glory, and plentifully support his ministers and members.

‖ It is important to observe, that while those who fear God, fear none but him; those who refuse to fear God, are never delivered from fear. The mightiest nations, even in time of profound peace, are always afraid of one another—fear, under the name of panic, is always at intervals smiting the heart, and paralyzing the arm of commerce; and there is an undefined sense of fear, an instinctive prophesying of impending calamities, and a certain "fearful looking for of judgment," from which no sinner can escape so long as he neglects the "great salvation."—ED.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAP. XXIII.—The wealthiest on earth are quickly reduced to poverty, and the most noisy traders to silence. And earthly friends can give but little help in our distress, however deeply they be concerned on account of it. When God pursues, there is no fleeing from our misery: and the more secure we lived, the more grievous will be our fall. There is no fixed, no solid rest, but in Jesus Christ, and in fellowship with him!—What a mercy is it if an afflicting God do not draw out his wrath to all generations,—to eternity! And if he turn back our captivity, he can bring back our lost prosperity. But earthly wealth often seduces men's souls into spiritual whoredom. Happy therefore are they whose troubles lead them to the knowledge of God, and whose trade regained is devoted to the service of Jesus Christ! Let him be my merchant, my wealth, my strong city; and I, and all I have, be HOLINESS TO THE LORD.

CHAP. XXIV.—Ver. 13—15. Such, as are graciously preserved, shall cordially and publicly acknowledge God's great power and goodness in their preservation, and praise him in the countries where they sojourn. And your duty is to own his power, justice, and mercy, and to trust in him, and patiently wait for deliverance, in every fiery trial, and in every country, however remote. 16. May either signify that, though once the whole land of Israel was filled with shouts of praise to a righteous and promise-performing God, yet there is now nothing but desolation, murder, pillage, and captivity, instead thereof; or that, though the Gentiles are in multitudes assembling to Christ and his worship, yet the Jewish nation reject him, and are rendered miserable on that account. 19, 20. God praised for his judgments, grace, and salvation.

7 And he will [†]destroy in this mountain the face of the covering [‡]cast over all people, and the vail that is spread over all nations.

8 He will swallow up death in victory; and the Lord GOD will wipe away tears from off all faces; and the [a]rebuke of his people shall he take away from off all the earth: for the LORD hath spoken it.

9 And it shall be said in that day, Lo, [b]this is our God; we have waited for him, and he will save us: this is the LORD; [c]we have waited for him, we will be glad and rejoice in his salvation.

10 For in this mountain [d]shall the hand of the LORD rest; and Moab[*] shall be [†]trodden down under him, even as straw is [e]trodden down for the dunghill.

11 And he shall spread forth his hands in the midst of them, as he that swimmeth spreadeth forth his hands to swim: and he shall bring down their pride together with the spoils of their hands.[‡]

tossed about from one place to another. 21, 22. May perhaps represent the final ruin of the Assyrians, Chaldeans, Romans, Antichristians, Turks, and other enemies of the people of God, as well as of the Jewish great men. 23. The glorious reign of Christ in his church, particularly in the apostolic, millennial, and eternal periods, will obscure the lustre of all earthly grandeur and authority, and the greatest potentates shall stoop to him.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAP. XXIV.—What a world of sinning and suffering we live in! What a theatre of disappointments, dishonours, confusions, sorrows, and deaths! No rank, no place, nothing escapes the fearful effects of God's curse: and if men avoid one misery, they but fall into another. Nor are any more wretched than treacherous apostates from God, and rejecters of his Son. Nevertheless, God in the worst of times reserves a remnant for himself; and often makes the most terrible calamities an introduction to the most remarkable displays of his mercy and grace. In transcendent sovereignty did God bring in the accursed Gentiles to his church, when he rejected the seed of Abraham his friend. And in high sovereignty will Jesus hereafter, to the amazement of all beholders, convert both Jews and Gentiles to himself; and at last, for the eternal manifestation of his glorious perfections, translate his whole kingdom to the celestial mansions above.

CHAP. XXV.—Ver. 1—5. All the desolations which thou hast made in the cities of the heathen are the execution of thy purposes, and fulfilment of thy word: and thereby shall the stoutest of thine enemies be obliged to acknowledge thy almighty power and strict justice. And, as thou hast formerly protected and comforted thy people when furiously assaulted and distressed by their powerful enemies, thou shalt continue, with infinite ease, to baffle the most furious attempts of thine adversaries, and to reduce them, and their posterity to ruin. 6—9. In Judea, but chiefly in the firmly-founded and wide-spread gospel church, shall the Lord exhibit, offer to, and bestow on, sinful men of all nations, the spiritual and eternal blessings of his new covenant, feast them on the flesh and blood of his Son, remove their ignorance and guilt, redeem them from death, comfort them against grief, remove the tokens of his anger, and enable them to triumph in himself and his salvation. 10—12. And while he dwells with, delights in, and protects his people, he shall everywhere, and with infinite ease, utterly destroy all their enemies; sin, Satan, death, and hell, not excepted.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAP. XXV.—Thrice blessed is that people whose God is the Lord; and who have all his persons, perfections, purposes, promises, threatenings, and works, engaged in their behalf! It is wicked, mad, and self-ruinous, for the mightiest powers of hell or earth to injure them, or to attempt their destruction. Why then should not their lips be filled with his praise and honour all the day, who is so much to them, has done, does, can, and will do, so much for their salvation in time and eternity? What a ground of grateful praise is it, that in Judah's land, on Calvary's mount, Jesus prepared himself, and all the fulness of God in him, to be our abundant provision! He finished transgression, and made an end of sin. He, through death, destroyed death and him that had the power of it, and purchased an infinite fulness of light, life, comfort, and salvation, for men. What ground of praise is it that, in the gospel, he sets before sinners of the Gentiles all the fulness of God in himself, for our present and everlasting nourishment! And why not rejoice in him for that he has pledged his infallible promise, that heathenism, popery, and everything sinful and ruinous, shall give place to his glory filling the whole earth, and to his being in heaven our everlasting ALL and IN ALL.

CHAP. XXVI.—Ver. 1, 2. As God fortified and protected Jerusalem from Sennacherib's army, and by their destruction gave his people access to celebrate their solemn feasts, so shall he firmly found and fortify his gospel church, that no power of hell or earth shall ever prevail against her; and multitudes of persons, justified in Christ, sincere and steady in their profession, and holy in their conversation, shall be added as her members. 5, 6. Not only Nineveh, Babylon, and Rome, but Heathenism, Mahometanism, and Popery, shall be extirpated, and the gospel planted instead thereof, even by weak instruments. 7. God makes the way of his people plain and clear, and he directs, judges, and approves, their conduct. 8, 9. Lord, even under thy heavy chastisements, we have patiently served thee and waited for deliverance, and have earnestly desired, meditated on, and comforted ourselves in thy grace, power, and faithfulness, and the former manifestations thereof. 9—11. Adversity is an ordinary mean of stirring up men to consideration and necessary duties; but whether thou prosper or punish obstinate sinners, they blind and harden themselves under both mercies and judgments. No ordinances, patterns, nor providences, can move them to duty: but they shall at length feel thy judgments, and be filled with shame for their spiteful behaviour towards thy people. 12—14. Thou, who hast afflicted us, wilt render us happy and prosperous, even as thou hast already vouchsafed great mercies and deliverances to us. Many heathen powers have tyrannized over us; but by thy favour and help we will own thee alone for our God, trust in thee for, and give thee the praise of, all our deliverances. Thy providence hath effectually and irrecoverably destroyed all our oppressors. 15—18. Both the Jewish nation and the Christian church have been exceedingly enlarged and extended; but, notwithstanding our prayers in trouble, and painful attempts, all has been hitherto useless: the wicked still continue numerous and powerful. 19. The Jewish nation, seemingly dead under the Assyrian ravages, the Chaldean captivity, and present dispersion, shall again revive and flourish. The gospel church shall be restored, after her decays, by the influence of a preached gospel: and at the last day every true member, through union to Jesus Christ, shall be raised to everlasting life. 20, 21. But as terrible troubles must come for the punishment of the wicked, and the manifestation of their wickedness, it is necessary that every saint, by faith, repentance, and prayer, flee to God for protection, lay hold on his promises, and depend on his perfections and providences, till that time of fearful calamities be over.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAP. XXVI.—Eternally safe are they who have fled to Jesus Christ for refuge, and are encompassed by infallible promises and infinite perfections! No christian character can be formed without a steadfast and exact adherence to God's truths. Truly righteous, upright, and humble saints, are an inestimable blessing to nations and churches. Steady faith in God's perfections and promises produces much solid peace and composure of mind. If we trust in him firmly, we shall find ground to praise him constantly. And if we by faith put our strong enemies in his hand, he will easily bring them down. If with ardent desires we wait for him in every ordinance and providence, we shall quickly find him to our comfort. And the earlier and more earnest our supplications are, they will be the more graciously answered. Alas! how hardened are many hearts, that neither mercies can melt, nor judgment awaken them! But it is good for us to draw near to God, and renounce all his rivals! Whatever discouraging providences he may exercise us with for a while, confusion and ruin will overwhelm all his and our enemies at last. Let us therefore be sober, and hope to the end for his salvation. He quickens dead souls, revives dead churches, and will at last quicken our dead bodies, and make them like unto his glorious body. Under manifold troubles and injuries let us possess our souls in patience. The Judge stands at the door. Our afflictions, however sharp, will soon be over; and our protection in them, under the shadow of the Almighty, is both safe and sweet. But what awful discoveries will God make of men's sins when he rises up to punish them!

CHAP. XXVII.—Ver. 1. Tyrannical oppressors, strong, furious, crafty, and mischievous, are likened to leviathans, serpents, dragons, &c., especially if they dwelt near such animals, as the kings of Assyria, Egypt, and Babylon did. 2, 3 The reformed Jewish nation and gospel church is likened to a vineyard bringing forth the choicest vines; because, being planted, watered, and protected by God, they abounded in good works. 4. Though I was angry with them, mine anger is turned away through Christ: but if hypocrites in the church, or profane persons without it, offer to contend with me, they may expect to be quickly destroyed. 5, 6. Jews and true church members shall, as reconciled through Christ, be firmly settled, and shall increase in numbers and glory. 7—9. Nor will God afflict his own people in the same wrathful and ruinous manner as he does their heathen or antichristian enemies; but will so mitigate their troubles as that they may be able to bear them; and make them means of stirring them up to repentance and reformation, particularly in detesting and destroying their idolatrous altars, groves, and images. 10, 11. Nevertheless, to punish the stupidity and blindness of the present generation, and their imitators in wickedness, the defenced cities shall be laid desolate, and the palaces become pastures for flocks and herds. The whole country shall be exposed to the ravage of the most weak and contemptible enemies. 12, 13. By the providence of God, and proclamation of Cyrus, the Jews shall be brought back to their own land from Chaldea and from Egypt, and shall build the temple, and restore the worship of God at Jerusalem. In the latter days they shall be gathered from the east and west, north and south, and shall embrace the Christian faith, and from every quarter shall God, in the apostolic and millennial periods, gather men to the church and worship of Jesus Christ.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAP. XXVII.—No enemy is too strong for God to deal with; and his remarkable deliverances tune his people's hearts to praise him. Being infinitely dear and precious to him, his church can never fail, nor any true member totally or finally fall from grace. He, as reconciled in Christ, delights to reconcile the world to himself, and bless men with all spiritual blessings in him: but it is infinitely hazardous to set ourselves in opposition to him. Never are our troubles on earth so sharp, but it is a mercy that they are not heavier; and when God inflicts one sore judgment he ordinarily restrains another. Whatever the saints lose in their troubles, their enemies lose more in the end. Troubles must either destroy the sin or the sinner. And if mitigated troubles be merciful, sanctified ones are much more so. How provoking to God, and ruinous to men, is ignorance of God under the means of knowledge and grace! But how marvellous is it that, by the most terrible outward calamities, he should pave the way to remarkable mercies, and that the ruin and scattering of nations should introduce a gathering to Jesus Christ and his worship, nay, to his heavenly mansions! And, notwithstanding all the opposition of hell and earth, not one elect soul shall come short either of grace here or glory hereafter.

CHAP. XXVIII.—Ver. 1—4. The proud state and drunken nation of the Israelites shall quickly be robbed of their present transitory power and honour. The Assyrians, furiously invading their country, shall irresistibly, easily, and suddenly, reduce them to debasement and misery, lay desolate their country, and seize on their wealth. 5, 6. But the kingdom of Judah shall be marvellously preserved and continued in their relation to God; their magistrates shall be endowed with wisdom and prudence, and their armies with courage and valour, to pursue the enemy. 7—13. But they too, their priests and prophets not excepted, are so stupified with drunkenness, error, and superstition, that there is no possibility of instructing them, however frequently the same things be repeated to them; therefore God shall send among them the Assyrians, Chaldeans, and Romans, who shall instruct them by repeated and ruinous strokes. And since they have refused to hearken to God's promises, and the offers of his Son and salvation, as the only sure and effectual means of comfort and happiness, their refractory despising of his repeated invitations shall issue in their ruin. 14, 15. And because you, rulers of Judah, deride God's threatenings, and boast that, by confederacies and other political devices, you have secured yourselves and your nation from danger; 16. Behold God exhibits and offers to you his precious Christ, as the sole foundation of solid hope, and the only sure refuge in time of trouble, on whom whosoever believeth need take no unlawful means to escape, or get out of trouble. 17—22. But such of you as reject him shall have all your vain hopes frustrated. The Assyrians shall certainly ravage the country: nor shall your confederacies and carnal politics in the least protect you from their fury. They shall quickly involve you in misery; nay, the very rumour of their approach shall fill you with consternation and anguish. None of your devices, to which you have trusted, will secure you, while, contrary to his usual method, God shall employ his almighty power for the destruction of a great part of his professed people; and if ye despise his threatenings, ye shall be enslaved by the Assyrians and others: for he has determined to accomplish, by sword, famine, pestilence, and captivity, the utter destruction of the Israelites, and of a great part of the kingdom of Judah. 27, 28. In the Eastern countries, wheat was beaten out from the husk by drawing a kind of drag with iron wheels over it.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAP. XXVIII.—Pride and drunkenness render men a compound of beasts and devils; abominations to God, and plagues and monsters on earth. But whatever sinners are proud of is but fading. And nothing bids fairer to hurl men quickly into the depths of disgrace, poverty, and damnation, than pride and drunkenness. God sovereignly honours and blesses one nation, while he disgraces and destroys another. But thrice happy are those to whom Jesus Christ, and God in him, are their glory and crown. Base corruptions often continue, even amidst the most candid and zealous attempts towards reformation. But it is shameful and ill-boding when priests and prophets are partners in their stupidity, and ringleaders in superstition and wickedness. What multitudes obstinately live in ignorance or rejection of God's truth! But if they refuse to hear his word, he will make them feel his rod: and none shall feel it more certainly than proud scorners and obstinate refusers of Jesus Christ. How rich is the grace of God, in exhibiting Jesus as a Saviour to men, when they have eminently ripened themselves for his vengeance! Eternally safe are they who trust in him, when all other refuges fail, when all carnal projects and self-righteousness prove lies in their right hand.—But what sovereignty, wisdom, holiness, and equity, does God manifest in forming and timing every judgment which he inflicts!

CHAP. XXIX.—Ver. 1, 2. Jerusalem is called ARIEL, from the altar of burnt-offering which devoured the offerings sacrificed upon it.—Notwithstanding all their sacrifices and pretended devotions, both city and temple shall be brought into great straits,—and filled with fire, blood, and carcasses of men, sacrificed to my justice. 3, 4. By the enemies whom I shall appoint against you, your present haughtiness and scoffing shall be turned into great debasement, distress, and submission. 5—8. Doth perhaps not only denounce the sudden destruction of their enemies, by the fearful judgments of God, but also the ruin of the Jews

7 [b]And the multitude of all the nations that fight against Ariel, even all that fight against her and her munition, and that distress her, shall be as a dream of a night-vision.

8 [c] It shall even be as when an hungry man dreameth, and, behold, he eateth; but he awaketh, and his soul is empty: or as when a thirsty man dreameth, and, behold, he drinketh; but he awaketh, and, behold, he is faint, and his soul hath appetite: so shall the multitude of all the nations be that fight against mount Zion.*

9 ¶ Stay† yourselves, and wonder; [d]cry ye out, and cry: they are drunken, but not with wine; they stagger, but not with strong drink.

10 For the LORD hath poured out‡ upon you the spirit of deep sleep, and hath closed your eyes: the prophets and your [e]rulers, the seers hath he covered.

11 And the vision of all is become unto you as the words of [§]a book that is sealed, which men deliver to one that is learned, saying, Read this, I pray thee: and he saith, I cannot; for it is sealed.

12 And the book is delivered to him that is not learned, saying, Read this, I pray thee: and he saith, I am [f]not learned.

13 ¶ Wherefore the LORD said, [g]Forasmuch as this people draw near me with their mouth, and with their lips do honour me, but have removed their heart far from me, and their fear toward me is taught by the precept of men:

14 Therefore, behold, [‖]I will proceed to do a marvellous work among this people, even a marvellous work and a wonder; for the wisdom of their wise men shall perish, and the understanding of their prudent men shall be hid.*

15 Wo unto them that [h]seek deep to hide their counsel from the LORD, and their works are in the dark! and they say, Who seeth us? and who knoweth us?

16 Surely [i]your turning of things upside down† shall be esteemed as the potter's clay: for shall the work say of him that made it, He made me not? or shall the thing framed say of him that framed it, He had no understanding?

17 ¶ Is it not yet a [k]very little while, and [l]Lebanon shall be turned into a fruitful field, and the fruitful field shall be esteemed as a forest?*

18 And in that day [m]shall the deaf hear the words of the book, and the eyes of the blind shall see out of obscurity, and out of darkness.

19 [n]The meek also† shall increase their joy in the LORD, and the poor among men shall rejoice in the Holy One of Israel.

20 For [o]the terrible one is brought to nought, and the scorner is consumed, and all that watch for iniquity are cut off:

21 That [p]make a man an offender for a word,† and lay a snare for him that [q]reproveth in the gate, and turn aside the just for a thing of nought.

22 Therefore thus saith the LORD, who [r]redeemed Abraham, concerning the house of [s]Jacob, Jacob shall not now be ashamed, neither shall his face now wax pale.

23 But when he seeth [t]his children, the work of mine hands, in the midst of him, they shall sanctify my name, and sanctify the Holy One of Jacob, and shall fear the God of Israel.

24 They also that erred in spirit [§]shall come to understanding, and they that murmured[‖] shall learn doctrine.

anxiliaries and armies, and their own terrible distress, while their enemies were quite insatiable in devouring and destroying. 9—12. With amazement ponder and bewail your condition, and cry for deliverance; for all ranks are besotted with corrupt principles, unsteadiness, and stupidity; and neither ignorant nor learned either understand or regard the warnings of God. 13—16. Because their religious devotion is merely in outward appearance, while the most abominable wickedness reigns in their heart, and merely an observance of the commands of Hezekiah, or the traditions of the elders, I will punish them with astonishing miseries, baffle all the deep-laid projects of their politicians, and give up their doctors to amazing stupidity. All their subtle devices, for perverting the order which I have fixed, shall be as easily altered as clay by the potter, and as ineffectual to accomplish their designs as clay without a potter. 17—21. Amazing changes shall happen on fields and nations: the long barren Gentile world being converted to Christ, and rendered fruitful in good works, while the Jews shall be rejected by God from his church. The unconcerned and ignorant Gentiles shall be brought to the knowledge of God in Christ; and amidst affliction and poverty, shall rejoice in himself and his favours; while their proud and powerful enemies, who watched for opportunities of doing mischief, and who hated reproof, and persecuted the prophets and ministers of God, and, for a trifling consideration, perverted justice, shall be destroyed. 22—24. And notwithstanding the distresses or rejection of the Jews, the church shall be gloriously enlarged, to the great comfort of the pious Jews, and honour of God; and multitudes of the most wicked and obstinate opposers shall be converted, especially in the millennial period.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAP. XXIX.—Formal hypocrites may go on long in a round of external duties; but dreadful and debasing is the vengeance of God which awaits them, and which awaits the chastisers even of his provoking people. His judgments make the stoutest hearts to bow or to break. Fearful is their condition who are drunk with the love of pleasures, honours, or wealth, or with corrupt principles and prejudices; or who are so abandoned to spiritual stupidity, that the best means can neither enlighten nor awake them. Alas! how wicked, how villanous is it to approach God in outward forms of devotion, while we hate him in our heart, and worship him only from regard to the authority of men! Absurd and fruitless is every scheme which is carried on independent of, and in opposition to, God. But thrice happy is it to have external calamities balanced with subsequent spiritual blessings; and that the casting away of the Jews has issued in the reconciling of the Gentile world to him;—and in some future period, how much more shall their fulness!

They send whole loads of presents upon asses and camels southward into Egypt, which will but hurt instead of helping them, and will soon be as miserable as themselves. But their only way to secure themselves is to stay at home, and trust in, and wait upon, God for his help. See ver. 15. 9—17. sudden and inexpressible joy, the Lord, in the execution of his purposes and predictions, will, with great ease, but in a most terrible and sudden manner, destroy the Assyrian army in the valley of Hinnom, before Jerusalem, as a prelude of similar ruin to the rest of your adversaries.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAP. XXX.—Men are too fond of trusting to human help in their distress, and too careless of that which is divine. But what is got without the Lord's leave cannot be of any real service, but hurt. The notorious wickedness of professors justifies God's severest judgments against them!—It is infinitely criminal and hazardous for men to tempt God's ministers to unfaithfulness in delivering his messages. God frequently gives them up to delusion who incline to it; and punishes such as scoff at his admonitions with fearful, certain, and unavoidable ruin. There is no way of escaping his judgments but by a believing and penitent turning to himself. And if, notwithstanding thousands of provocations and judgments, he still waits to be gracious, earnestly ought we to wait and cry for his favours. Persevering faith and prayer always issue in substantial and lasting comforts. Great is the mercy to have an open access to Jesus Christ's ministers and ordinances, and to be directed in every step by God's teaching Spirit and a tender conscience. Detestable to exercised saints are their formerly beloved lusts, and precious are new covenant blessings. The relief of God's people, and the ruin of their enemies, are marvellously connected. In his anger he blasts, overflows, sifts, bridles, beats, and burns up his most proud and powerful opposers with the greatest ease! Having therefore received a kingdom that cannot be moved, let me have grace, wherewith I may serve him acceptably with reverence and godly fear; for our God is a consuming fire.

CHAP. XXXI.—Ver. 2, 3. As wise as you think yourselves, God will countermine all your subtle contrivances, and bring effectual ruin upon both you and your Egyptian helpers. 4, 5. Undismayed by all the noise, boasting, and blasphemy of the Assyrians, God shall, with almighty force, furiously encounter and devour them; but tenderly defend Jerusalem, as a bird doth its nest, or as the angel did the Israelites when he destroyed the Egyptians. 8, 9. By the immediate vengeance of God shall the Assyrian army be generally destroyed; and Sennacherib himself, with the poor remains, terrified by the visible tokens of God's wrath, shall flee home to Nineveh his capital.—God had his sanctuary and altar in Jerusalem, and there he appeared, like a fire, to defend his people, and consume his enemies.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAP. XXXI.—Many wickedly go far for human help, and to no purpose, when they might have help from God at hand, to infinite advantage. But the more we know of men, we shall trust them the less; and the more we know of God, we shall trust him the more. It is an atheistical disbelief of his all-sufficiency that ever makes us depart from him to depend on a creature: and when we do so, we may expect to have it ruined along with ourselves. But ever safe are those whom God defends with infinite compassion and almighty power. His promises are an infallible ground of faith; his goodness ought to lead the greatest rebels against him to a kindly repentance; and every remarkable deliverance should be attended with remarkable reformation. But great is the ruin and the terror which await his implacable foes!

subjects in the laws of God, and treat every one according to his real character, bad or good.—Jesus shall erect and govern his church in the most righteous manner, and his apostles and ministers shall wisely dispense his ordinances. He shall protect, refresh, quicken, and comfort his people in all their tribulations. Such as have spiritual knowledge shall have it greatly increased; and even the inconsiderate shall be made to know, and the weak to declare, the things of God with great distinctness. Worthless, hypocritical, and mischievous oppressors shall be detected, and debarred from offices or honours, while they, who are liberal and upright, shall be visibly blessed, and prosper. 9—14. Terrible shall be the distress and anguish of those cities and wanton women, who, by their pride and vanity, provoked God to wrath; when, through the ravage of the enemy, neither milk, nor corn, nor wine, shall be found, but the whole land be turned into, and for many years or ages continued, a desolate wilderness. 15—20. But when God shall pour forth his Spirit, mighty changes shall ensue, and great revivals in souls, in churches, and nations, shall be wrought. The gospel shall be received, and righteous judgments executed everywhere. Great shall be the peace and real prosperity of true believers, even while the unbelieving Jews, or others, shall be fearfully destroyed. And great shall be the success of ministers in the conversion of multitudes to Christ.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAP. XXXII.—Greatly beneficial are virtuous magistrates: but much more a gracious, a divine Saviour. Safely may the most guilty rest under his all-covering propitiation; and the most weak and oppressed under his powerful protection. Hopeful is the case, when those who are ignorant are willing to be taught, and when everything is called by its own proper name. When persons are held in esteem, according to their real deserts; when they, who are active in plotting or practising wickedness, are disgraced; and they, who are active in contriving or performing what is good, are high in repute. But rarely any remarkable reformation happens, but some fearful judgment on the despisers and opposers thereof attends it. And how alarming at last, to the sons and daughters of unconcern, gaiety, and mirth, are the terrible, the desolating, and the damning judgments of God! O what remarkable reformation God's Spirit, by the preaching of the gospel, can make among nations, and in ages the most corrupted! Great are the advantages, the solid satisfaction, and substantial comforts, which are to be had in real fellowship with, and likeness to, God! And great is the honour of faithfully preaching the gospel, and abounding in works of charity.

CHAP. XXXIII.—Ver. 1, 3, 4. When God has punished the nations around by the Assyrians, all their ravage, oppression, and treachery, shall be revenged on themselves. The destruction of their camp, by the angel, shall make the remainder to flee home with great precipitation; and the inhabitants of Jerusalem shall, in multitudes, gather up the spoil. 5, 6. While God shall thus exalt himself in the destruction of his enemies, and deliverance of his people, he will bless Jerusalem with true religion and righteousness: and by the abounding of real piety, and by the wise and prudent administration of government, shall the nation be preserved, and even rendered wealthy during Hezekiah's reign? 7—9. The Jewish soldiers shall be quite dispirited and vexed: their ambassadors, sent to supplicate terms of peace, shall return weeping on account of their unsuccessfulness. ‖ It shall come upon Idumea, as a commencement of the prophecy—a specimen and notice of the judgments to come. Nor is there any land, except that of Babylon, whose destruction seems so complete, or whose renovation seems so hopeless. Like judgments were foretold against both, and alike terrible to the nations that forget God, should be their fulfilment.—Ed.

* An ancient city of Edom or Idumea, in Arabia Petræa, supposed to have been situated near mount Hor. After successive captures and pillagings by Assyrians, Chaldeans, and the Jews, it became a Roman colony under Severus, and, at a subsequent period, a Christian city. But the terrible prophecies of Isaiah and Jeremiah have long since been fulfilled, and it is literally "a desolation, a reproach, a waste, and a curse." Jer. 49. 13.—Ed.

late. 10—12. But when all hopes of deliverance to the Jews seem gone, I will exert my almighty power. I will render all the Assyrians' plots fruitless; and their rage against my people shall be revenged in their own sudden and fearful destruction. 13, 14. All around them shall be alarmed; and even the hypocritical Jews terrified, lest like judgments, or damnation in hell, should seize on themselves. 15—24. The righteous, who labour to avoid every evil, however gainful or pleasant, shall be safely preserved and abundantly supplied. They shall behold Hezekiah in health, prosperity, and glory, and freely travel through the whole of Canaan. Nay, they shall, by faith, behold Jesus in his glory and the heavenly felicities. They shall, with solemn awe, wonder how suddenly the Assyrian army is destroyed or fled, and how safe Jerusalem is; and how marvellously the Lord has protected his people, answerably to his relations to them; and how, while the Assyrian army is irrecoverably shattered to pieces, and their spoil gathered by the feeble Jews, Hezekiah, and his subjects, are delivered from their sickness and distress, and have the tokens of the Lord's favour restored to them. —N. B. It is easy to apply the above explication to the deliverance from the Chaldeans, Syro-grecians, Romans, or Antichristians.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAP. XXXIII.—Wicked men never hesitate at falsehood, fraud, or violence, to accomplish their own ends. But the less men provoke them to do evil, the more they provoke God in doing it. And whenever they have filled up the measure of their iniquities, God will awake to punish them. There is no fear of a church or nation, while a spirit of prayer continues in it. They who wait on God shall never be forsaken by him. Nay, he often, in his kindness, exceeds their expectations, and always exalts himself, by the judgments which he executes. And where he reigns in the heart, real safety and wealth attend him! True knowledge of his grace is the great stability of the soul; and the fear of God is the Christian's best treasure. They who contemn God are often imperious and abusive to men. But the more hardened and prosperous they are, the nearer is their terrible destruction. The most secure sinners shall be alarmed at last, and made to see God's hand in his judgments. Eternal damnation shall at last appear dreadful to the most scornful! But great is the mercy, if God's judgments in Zion should awaken her hypocritical professors to flee from the wrath to come to the Almighty, the all-saving, Jesus Christ! Great piety and comfort, safety and peace, order, health, and forgiveness, attend his gracious deliverances! And thrice happy they who have him for their ALL IN ALL.

CHAP. XXXIV.—Ver. 3—6. The mountains shall run down with large streams of the blood of slain persons. Dreadful shall be the confusion, desolation, and consternation everywhere; for my purposed judgments shall be executed upon mine enemies, whom I have devoted to destruction, and persons of all ranks shall

CHAPTER XXXVI.

(1) Historical recollections of Sennacherib and Rabshakeh, Eliakim, Shebna and Joah: 1—20. (2) Prudence and piety of Hezekiah: 21, 22.

A. M. cir. 3292.
B. C. cir. 712.

NOW [a] it came to pass in the fourteenth year of king Hezekiah, that Sennacherib king of Assyria came up against all the defenced cities of Judah, and took them.

a 2 Kin. 18. 13. 2 Chr. 32. 1.

* A city of Judah about 20 miles south of Jerusalem. On account of its idolatry, it was threatened with divine judgments, (Mic. 1. 13.) which fell upon it, first, during the invasion of Sennacherib, and more fully during that of Nebuchadnezzar. (2 Kings 18. 17. Jer. 34. 7.) It continued a city till at least the 4th century of the Christian era; but since the occupation of Palestine by the Arabs, even its ruins have totally disappeared.—ED.

2 ¶ And the king of Assyria sent Rabshakeh from Lachish* to Jerusalem unto king Hezekiah with a great army: and he stood by the conduit of the upper pool, in the highway of the fuller's field.

3 Then came forth unto him Eliakim, Hilkiah's son, which was over the house, and fall a sacrifice to my avenging justice. 11, 12. God shall mark them out for destruction as with a line and plummet; and none shall be able to govern or help them. 16, 17. In the exact fulfilment of this prophecy, shall the Spirit, power, and providence of God collect together, and preserve a succession of these doleful creatures, in these perpetually desolate habitations of wickedness.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAP. XXXIV.—It is proper that sinners should listen to God's threatenings, as he can quickly make them feel what they are averse to hear. Terrible, but righteous, are the judgments which he inflicts, especially upon them who injure his people. And he can easily unite the curses of Sodom and Babylon upon such as refuse to take warning by their fate. It is madness to fix our hearts on earthly things, when their end may quickly be so miserable. And let us here seriously consider how dreadful sin must be, the cause of all judgments,—and hell, the perfection of them.

CHAP. XXXV.—Ver. 1—4. These fearful judgments shall issue in the great comfort of the church. Multitudes of barren, destitute, bewildered, and ungodly sinners, shall be converted to Christ; and by beholding his glories revealed in the gospel, shall abound in comfort, holiness, and virtue. The most weak and timorous shall be strengthened and encouraged by the views of their incarnate God and all-conquering and saving Redeemer. 5—7. While multitudes of benevolent miracles, on the bodies of men, are wrought by Jesus Christ and his apostles, multitudes of sinners shall be savingly enlightened, healed, strengthened, and comforted; and by the influence of the preached gospel, and the Spirit of God poured forth upon them, shall vast numbers of saints, and of good works, be found in places which had been the most noted habitations of wickedness and devils. 8—10. Jesus Christ, as the divinely appointed mean of salvation and holiness, and of all our access to God, shall be exhibited in the gospel; in whom, as their way, not the unclean and obstinate sinners, but justified and regenerated men, however weak, shall walk, without erring from it. None can walk therein while under the reign of their unruly and mischievous lusts; nor can earth or hell hurt those redeemed ones who walk in it: but in attending Christ's ordinances, they shall at last arrive at the complete and everlasting happiness of the heavenly state.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAP. XXXV.—God can quickly make the most amazing changes on countries and nations, either in mercy or in judgment. Glorious things are said of our New Testament church, especially in her apostolical and millennial periods. And her extent, comfort, light, life, holiness, and safety, inconceivably exceeds that of the old. Believing views of Jesus Christ's person and fulness effectually quicken, fructify, and comfort the heart. And an assured faith of his approach is sufficient to silence every fear and doubt. How sovereign are God's bestowals of his word and Spirit! and how effectual for the illumination, quickening, encouragement, strengthening, and sanctification of men! The grace of the gospel teaches men to deny ungodliness and worldly lusts; and to live soberly, righteously, and godly, in this present world. Unspeakable is the safety, and transcendent the happiness, of ransomed men. Certainly and quickly that holiness, which is now begun in them, is graciously rewarded, and their sanctified sorrows are balanced with the everlasting joys of the Lord.

Shebna the [a]scribe, and Joah, Asaph's son, the recorder.

4 And Rabshakeh said unto them; Say ye now to Hezekiah, Thus saith the great king, the king of Assyria, What [b]confidence is this wherein thou trustest?

5 I say, sayest thou, (but they are but [*]vain words,) [c]I have counsel and strength for war: now, on whom dost thou trust, that thou rebellest against me?

6 Lo, thou trustest in the [d]staff of this broken reed,[†] on Egypt; whereon if a man lean, it will go into his hand, and pierce it: so is Pharaoh king of Egypt to all that trust in him.

7 But if thou say to me, [e]We trust in the LORD our God: is it not he whose high places and whose altars Hezekiah hath taken away,[‡] and said to Judah and to Jerusalem, Ye shall worship before this altar?

8 Now therefore give [f]pledges, I pray thee, to my master the king of Assyria, and [g]I will give thee two thousand horses, if thou be able on thy part to set riders upon them.

9 How then wilt thou turn away the face of [h]one captain of the least of my master's servants, and put thy trust on Egypt for chariots and for horsemen?

10 And am I now come up without the LORD against this land to destroy it? [i]the LORD said unto me,[§] Go up against this land, and destroy it.

11 ¶ Then said Eliakim, and Shebna, and Joah, unto Rabshakeh, Speak, I pray thee, unto thy servants in the Syrian language; for we understand it; and speak not to us in the [k]Jews' language, in the ears of the people that are on the wall.

12 ¶ But Rabshakeh said, Hath my master sent me to thy master and to thee to speak these words? hath he not sent me to the men that sit upon the wall, that they may eat their own dung, and drink their own [‖]piss with you?[*]

13 ¶ Then Rabshakeh stood, and cried with a loud voice in the Jews' language, and said, Hear ye the words of the great king,[†] the king of Assyria.

14 Thus saith the king, [l]Let not Hezekiah deceive you; for he shall not be able to deliver you.

15 Neither let Hezekiah make you trust in the LORD, saying, The LORD will surely deliver us: this city shall not be delivered into the hand of the king of Assyria.

16 Hearken not to Hezekiah; for thus saith the king of Assyria, [m][n]Make an agreement with me by a present, and come out to me: and eat ye [o]every one of his vine, and every one of his fig-tree, and drink ye every one the waters of his own cistern;

17 Until I come and take you away to a land like your own land,[*] a land of corn and wine, a land of bread and vineyards.

18 Beware lest Hezekiah persuade you, saying, The LORD will deliver us. Hath any of the gods of the nations delivered his land out of the hand of the king of Assyria?

19 Where are the gods of [p]Hamath[†] and Arphad?[‡] where are the gods of Sepharvaim?[§] and have they delivered Samaria out of my hand?

20 Who are they among all the gods of these lands, that have delivered their land out of my hand, that the LORD should deliver Jerusalem out of my hand?

21 But they held their peace, and answered him not a word: for the king's commandment was, saying, Answer him not.

22 ¶ Then came Eliakim the son of Hilkiah, that was over the household, and Shebna the scribe, and Joah, the son of Asaph, the recorder, to Hezekiah with their clothes rent, and told him the words of Rabshakeh.

But, as the "broken reed" is represented as "piercing" the hand that leans on it, "broken" must refer, not to a fracture in the reed itself, but to a fracture from the stem on which it grew. There is therefore some covert allusion to a change of dynasty, that rendered dependence upon Egypt more precarious than usual.—ED.

* It is evident that the Israelites were, about this time, seized with a spirit of emigration, either with a view to a safer country, or, as the world calls it, to "better their condition" (see ch. 20. 2. & 31. 1.); and that Rabshakeh takes advantage of this prevailing disposition to persuade them, by flattering promises, to an ignominious submission to a heathen power.—Note. It is thus, by prospect of deliverance from a present danger, or by promise of a future advantage, that sinners continue to tempt the people of God to reject truth and embrace error, to forsake Christ and follow the world.—ED.

* The doctrine of intercessory prayer runs through the whole word of God. It was exemplified when Abraham prayed for the cities of the plain; when Aaron ran with the censer between the people and the plague; when Job sacrificed for his children, and was directed to pray for his friends; when Paul prayed for the churches, and entreated them in turn to pray for him; and when James directs the sick to send for the elders of the church to pray over him both for health and forgiveness. It does not supersede private and personal prayer, as the case of Hezekiah shows, (see ver. 15—20.) Yet does it present (1) a more public testimony for God and his providence than secret prayer can furnish; (2) it excites him who is called to pray to godly sympathy with his brethren in distress; and (3) it reminds the believer of his only surety of salvation, the righteousness and intercession of Jesus his Redeemer and Advocate.—ED.

Reflections upon Chap. XXXVI.—How quickly Providence fulfils some awful predictions! And people may meet with great distress in the way of their duty, in order that their faith may be exercised, their graces brightened, and their glory increased. Let us then always look out and prepare for it, and not wonder if our most impious and treacherous enemies for a time prevail against us, and both with threats and derision tempt us to faint in, or desert, the good ways of the Lord. Let us never marvel if pride intoxicate sinners, and make them talk big of themselves, their works, and wealth; or if they should pretend power equal to God, or a commission from him. If we maintain our confidence in God, and continue in his service, we need not fear the want of his protection. It is base to make appeals heard, wherewith the servants of the king of Assyria have blasphemed me.

7 Behold, I will [d] send a blast upon him, and he shall hear a rumour, and return to his own land; and I will cause him* to fall by the sword in his own land.

8 ¶ [e] So Rabshakeh returned, and found the king of Assyria warring against Libnah:† for he had heard that he was departed from Lachish.

9 And [f] he heard say concerning Tirhakah king of Ethiopia,‡ He is come forth to make war with thee. And when he heard it, he sent messengers to Hezekiah, saying,

10 Thus shall ye speak to Hezekiah king of Judah, saying, Let not thy God in whom thou [g] trustest deceive thee, saying, Jerusalem shall not be given into the hand of the king of Assyria.

11 [h] Behold, thou hast heard what the kings of Assyria have done to all lands, by destroying them utterly, and shalt thou be delivered?

12 Have the gods of the nations delivered them which my fathers have destroyed, as [i] Gozan,§ and Haran,‖ and Rezeph,* and the children of Eden which were in Telassar?†

13 Where is the king of Hamath, and the king of Arphad, and the king of the city of [k] Sepharvaim, Hena, and Ivah?

14 ¶ And Hezekiah received the letter from the hand of the messengers, and read it: and Hezekiah [l] went up unto the house of the LORD, and spread it before the LORD.

15 And Hezekiah [m] prayed unto the LORD, saying,

16 O LORD of hosts, God of Israel, that dwellest between the cherubims, thou art the God, even thou alone, of all the kingdoms of the earth; [n] thou hast made heaven and earth.

17 [o] Incline thine ear, O LORD, and hear; open thine eyes, O LORD, and see; and hear all the words of Sennacherib, which hath sent to reproach the living God.

18 Of a truth, LORD, the kings of Assyria have laid waste all the [‡] nations, and their countries,

19 And have [p] cast their gods into the fire; for they were no gods, but the work of men's hands, wood and stone: therefore they have destroyed them.

20 Now therefore, [q] O LORD our God, save us from his hand, that all the kingdoms of the earth [r] may know that thou art the LORD, even thou only.

21 ¶ Then Isaiah the son of Amoz sent unto Hezekiah, saying, Thus saith the LORD God of Israel, Whereas thou hast prayed to me against Sennacherib king of Assyria:§

to the people while the affair is but debated between princes; or to take occasion, from soft speeches, to banter the more outrageously; or to talk of bettering men's condition when their ruin is really intended. How horridly insolent is it to compare JEHOVAH to an idol! or to imagine ourselves a match for his power! And though it be not always prudent to answer the blasphemy of railers, yet we ought always to be deeply affected with it.

9 ¶ [c]The writing of Hezekiah king of Judah, when he had been sick, and was recovered of his sickness:

10 I said, in the cutting off of my days, I shall go [d]to the gates of the grave; I am deprived of the residue of my years.

11 I said, I shall not see the LORD,* even the LORD, in the land of the living: I shall [e]behold man no more with the inhabitants of the world.

12 Mine age is departed, and is removed from me as a shepherd's tent:† I have cut off like a weaver my life; he will cut me off ‡with pining sickness: from day§ even to night wilt thou make an end of me.

13 I reckoned till morning, that, as a lion, so will he break all my bones:‖ from day even to night wilt thou make an end of me.

14 Like a crane, or a swallow, so did I chatter; I did mourn as a dove: [f]mine eyes fail with looking upward: O LORD, I am oppressed;* undertake for me.

15 [g]What shall I say? he hath both spoken† unto me, and himself hath done it: I shall go softly all my years in the bitterness of my soul.‡

16 O LORD, by these things men live, and in all these things is the life of my spirit: so wilt thou recover me, and make me to live.§

17 Behold, [h]for peace I had great bitterness; but [i]thou hast in love to my soul delivered it from the pit of corruption: for thou hast cast all my sins behind thy back.

18 For [k]the grave cannot praise thee; death can not celebrate thee: they that go down into the pit cannot hope for thy truth.‖

19 [l]The living, the living, he shall praise thee, as I do this day: [m]the father to the children shall make known thy truth.

20 [n]The LORD was ready to save me: therefore we will sing my songs* to the stringed instruments all the days of our life in the house of the LORD.

21 For Isaiah had said, [o]Let them take a lump of figs, and lay it for a plaster upon the boil, and he shall recover.

22 Hezekiah also had said, What is the [p]sign that I shall go up to the house of the LORD?

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAP. XXXVII.—The best way to baffle the malicious designs of enemies is to be driven to God and our duty by them. And the greatest ought to engage the prayers of Christ's ministers and saints in their favour. The more pinching our distresses, the more earnest ought to be our supplications. The weakest hopes of mercy should encourage, and the fearful reduction of God's people should excite us to that duty. When we are ready to despair, God can eminently magnify his power and grace in our deliverance. God's proud enemies may hiss against his people, but they cannot hurt them. And they, who attempt to terrify them from their holy profession, will soon be made a terror to themselves. Those who delight in war shall have enough of it at last; and their terrors do but presage their ruin. Success ordinarily hardens men in their evil ways, and renders them more and more deliberate in blasphemy. Earnestness and liberty in prayer is of infinite importance in a time of danger. And believing views of God's leading characters powerfully encourage distressed minds. If he give us inward satisfaction in his promise, we may bear with every possible abuse from men. All our fears of great destroyers ought to drive us to the great God our Saviour: and while we plead his glory in our own behalf, he will quickly answer our prayers, and manifest that he takes all the injury done to us as done to himself. He will show himself at once a kind benefactor and almighty protector, who takes notice of all the motions, projects, and speeches of our enemies. And such as magnify themselves against him and his people do but render themselves contemptible. They will find that there is no standing before his judgments, when they come with his commission to destroy.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAP. XXXVIII.—Death being the common fate of mankind, every one ought seriously to prepare for it. And nothing can be more seasonable than fervent prayer in a time of great trouble; nor anything more pleasant than the testimony of a good conscience, washed in Jesus' blood. It is a relief to a distressed heart to unbosom itself to God, whose ears are open to its cry. Nor can pious souls take much pleasure in life or personal comforts, unless God's church be revived and comforted along with them.—God takes pleasure in showing his people the immutability of his counsels, that they may have strong consolation. And if one miracle served to confirm Hezekiah's faith, why do not thousands confirm ours in the glorious Redeemer? And why are we so careless of keeping me-

AT [a] that time Merodach-baladan,* the son of Baladan, king of Babylon, sent letters and a present to Hezekiah: for he had heard that he had been sick, and was recovered.

2 And Hezekiah was glad of them,† and showed them the house of his [b] precious things, the silver, and the gold, and the spices, and the precious ointment, and all the house of his [‡§] armour, and all that was found in his treasures: there was [c] nothing in his house, nor in all his dominion, that Hezekiah showed them not.

3 ¶ Then came Isaiah the prophet unto king Hezekiah, and said unto him, [d] What said these men? and from whence came they unto thee? And Hezekiah said, They are come from *a far country unto me, even from Babylon.

4 Then said he, What have they seen in thine house? And Hezekiah answered, [f] All that is in mine house have they seen: there is nothing among my treasures that I have not showed them.

5 Then said Isaiah to Hezekiah, Hear the word of the LORD of hosts;

6 Behold, the days come, [g] that all that is in thine house, and that which thy fathers have laid up in store until this day, shall be carried to Babylon: nothing shall be left, saith the LORD.

7 And [h] of thy sons that shall issue from thee, which thou shalt beget, shall they take away; and they shall be eunuchs in the palace of the king of Babylon.

8 Then said Hezekiah to Isaiah, ‖Good‖ is the word of the LORD which thou hast spoken: he said moreover, For there shall be peace and truth in my days.*

† That Hezekiah was somehow in fault, the language of Isaiah (ver. 3, 4.) seems decidedly to testify. It is not easy, however, to determine precisely wherein his fault lay. But, most probably, the error lay in his good-natured desire to please the Babylonians, rather than to instruct the heathens; and in his greater alacrity to exhibit the temporal, rather than the spiritual, riches of his kingdom.—ED.

morials of our afflictions and deliverances, and of the working of our hearts under them, for the benefit of ourselves and others?—It is hard to keep the heart from despondency under sore and complicated troubles. God's providences indeed ought to affect our spirits with humility and constant fear; and in him alone should we hope for support and deliverance. Great is the kindness, the full forgiveness that he manifests in delivering from the utmost extremity of trouble. And the opportunity of living to his glory ought to be our principal reason for esteeming or desiring life. Blessed are those parents whose great care is to inform their children concerning Jesus and his truths! No means of relief ought to be used without dependence on the power and kindness of God. And we ought as eagerly to thank him for our deliverances as ever we prayed for them.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAP. XXXIX.—It highly becomes us to rejoice with them that rejoice, and weep with them that weep; and to honour them whom God delights to honour. They are often courted in prosperity who were contemned in adversity. Even men who hate God will caress his people on secular accounts; but often their kisses are deceitful. It is hard to be duly humble amidst great providential advancements. But to be fond of carnal respect marks very great weakness. And an intimacy or connexion with the wicked usually proves a fearful plague in the issue. In showing to our friends what we are or have, pride is ready to start up, and we forget God the giver.—Ministers ought always to be plain, impartial, and faithful in their rebukes. And if God love us, he will find means to pull down our proud spirits, if not to take from us the things of which we are proud. Let me then never be fond of that which, in the end, may turn out vanity and vexation of spirit! Let me evidence the truth of my repentance, by a cordial reception of faithful reproof, and a kindly submission to the chastisements of Providence. Let me reckon every moment's reprieve from hell or trouble a great mercy; and especially if God avert the storms of his vengeance till I be entered into my eternal rest.

CHAP. XL.—Ver. 2. God punished the Jews in Babylon enough to answer the purposes of his glory, and more than he did many of the heathens; and in Christ he received the most abundant satisfaction to his justice; and bestows great and manifold blessings instead of punishments. 3—8. By the providence of God, and proclamation of Cyrus, everything shall tend to promote the return of the Jews from Babylon; and no human power shall, in the least, be able to hinder the fulfilment of his promises. And by the preaching of John Baptist, shall the Jewish nation be prepared for the manifestation of the Messiah in his sufferings and glory; and all attempts of men to hinder the erection of his kingdom shall quickly be frustrated. 9—11. Let the Jews loudly triumph in God's powerful and tenderlycareful deliverance of them from Babylon, and conducting them back to their own country. And especially let the gospel church rejoice in the incarnation and mighty works of the great God our Saviour: his erection, nourishment, preservation, and government of her, and every one of her members, however weak and distressed. 21, 22. Do not even ye Gentiles know, by the light of nature, and by information derived from your ancestors, that JEHOVAH, the Creator and Governor of the world, is of such infinite perfection, that no image can represent him. 23, 24. He, with infinite ease, destroys the most powerful princes, and bereaves them of their power. 27, 28. Since God is so infinitely powerful, wise, and good, why should his own people ever distrust him, as if he disregarded their afflictions, or could not find out a way for their deliverance, or as if he neglected to redress their grievances? Know they not that he never becomes unable to help or take care of his people, and that there is no finding out the reasons of his dispensations? 30, 31. Whatever may become of persons of the greatest natural abilities, they who depend on the Lord for his assistance, and the performance of his promises, shall grow stronger in grace, and easily overcome every difficulty in the way of their duty.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAP. XL.—God's abundant consolations graciously follow his messages of terror and conviction; and he takes pleasure in the comfort and prosperity of his servants. How delightful is the real preaching of the gospel of Christ! It proclaims that forgiveness of sins, without which it is impossible to obtain any true comfort. God easily removes every bar out of his way in coming to us. And it is necessary that we lay aside every weight, and the sin which doth so easily beset us, in our approaches to him. It is a happy token of deliverance when our hearts are levelled by his grace, and made to behold his glory! Human power is little to be feared when against us, or trusted to when on our side! But infinite is the power, the faithfulness, the duration of the truths of Christ. Happy tidings are those which relate to him and his salvation! And happy is the period when he comes and performs all in all in and for his church; when he manifests his activity, care, and tenderness, in gathering sinners to himself, and in bearing and nourishing them up to eternal life! What empty nothings are all creatures in comparison of him! Why then should we not trust him in every difficulty, cleave to him under every discouragement, and revere him in the receipt of every favour! What image can ever truly represent the infinite JEHOVAH! What idol can deserve a comparison with the Almighty Maker of heaven and earth! It is weak and sinful to suspect that he has or can cast off his people. To them that wait on him, his infinite power and grace are a never-failing and abundant source of strength, quickening, and comfort.

CHAP. XLI.—Ver. 1, 2. Attentively hear my challenges, ye heathens; muster up all the arguments you can in your own defence. Who but myself called Abraham to his travels from his native country, enabled him to conquer the eastern kings, and his seed to conquer the Canaanites? Who, besides me, disposed and enabled Cyrus to execute my righteous judgments on the Chaldeans, and to grant deliverance to my people? Who raised up the all-conquering Immanuel, or enabled Saul the persecutor, and other apostles, irresistibly to conquer the nations to Christ by the preaching of the gospel? 4, 5. Who hath disposed of all the generations of mankind? Have not I, the eternal God? Observing with dread, my wonderful works, the heathens have consulted together how to preserve themselves and their idols. 8—16. Ye Jews, being mine by special covenant, whom I originally brought from among your neighbours in Chaldea to Canaan, and notwithstanding your repeated rebellions, have never rejected, ye must not worship idols. Indulge no slavish or desponding fears, for I am your infinite ALL IN ALL; and I will strengthen, help, and uphold you by my almighty power, manifested in the righteous destruction of mine adversaries and deliverance of my people. All your enemies shall quickly be overwhelmed with confusion and ruin; for I will guide, strengthen, and keep you from falling. And, however weak, despised, and oppressed you may be, I will enable you to subdue your most lofty, proud, and powerful adversaries, and make you to rejoice in and glorify me, as the author of all your privileges. 17—20. When poor indigent sinners are reduced to the most wretched condition, I will grant them comfort and relief; and will spread the gospel, and plant the ordinances thereof, and persons eminent for gifts and graces, among both Jews and Gentiles, in such a manner as will manifest my infinite power, and holiness to every observer. 25—27. I foretell that Cyrus the Medo-Persian shall subdue the Chaldean and other empires. But which of your idols can manifest their true divinity by foretelling any thing? It is only I, the eternal God, who can represent things future as if they were present, and enable prophets to foretell temporal or spiritual deliverances to my church.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAP. XLI.—The enemies of Jesus and the gospel may do their worst, it will but issue in their own confusion. The truths of the Bible will bear the strictest scrutiny. And since it is God who founds and protects the church, and assists her helpers, it is in vain for idolaters to unite in their efforts against her. But what fightings without, and fears within, have the people of God to encounter! Nothing but almighty power and grace can enable to conquer them, or can afford comfort under them. And seasonably does Jesus relieve his people in their extremity, and plant ordinances and true converts where he pleases. Be still then, my soul, and consider the insignificancy of every idol which thou hast put in JEHOVAH'S room. How late is their existence! how shortlived and uncertain their continuance! how limited their knowledge! how small their power, and unimportant their work! God forbid I should make that my god which did not make me out of nothing; and which cannot warn me of every danger, protect me from every enemy, and through eternity be my all-sufficient portion.—But let Jesus, and JEHOVAH in him, be my ALL IN ALL: my Friend, to love me at all times; my Companion, to guide me to glory; my Helper, to assist me in every work; my Captain of salvation, to slay my foes, and make me in all things more than a conqueror; my Supplier and my Provision; my Comforter and my Consolation. —What have I to do any more with idols? Let me cast them to the moles and to the bats—cast them away as a menstruous cloth—as vanity and confusion.

(1) The servant of the Lord in meekness and constancy: 1—4. (2) God's promise to his servant: 5—9. (3) An exhortation to praise: 10—16. (4) Unbelief reproved: 17—25.

BEHOLD [a] my servant, whom I uphold; mine elect, in whom my soul delighteth: I have put my Spirit upon him; he shall bring forth judgment [*] to the Gentiles.

2 He shall not cry, nor lift up, nor cause his voice to be heard in the street.[†]

3 A bruised reed shall he not break, and the [‡] smoking flax [§] shall he not [‖] quench: he shall bring forth judgment unto truth.

4 He shall not fail nor be [*] discouraged, till he have set judgment in the earth; and the isles shall wait for his law.

5 ¶ Thus saith God the LORD, he that created the heavens, and stretched them out; he that spread forth the earth, and that which cometh out of it; he that giveth breath unto the people upon it, and spirit to them that walk therein:

6 I the LORD have called thee in righteousness, and will hold thine hand, and will keep thee, and give thee for a covenant of the people,[†] for [b] a light of the Gentiles;

7 To open the blind eyes, to bring out the prisoners from the prison, and them that sit in darkness out of the prison-house.[‡]

8 I am the LORD; that is my name: and my [c] glory will I not give to another, neither my praise to graven images.

9 Behold, the former things are come to pass, and new things do I declare; before they spring forth I tell you of them.

10 ¶ Sing unto the LORD a new [§] song, and his praise from the end of the earth, ye that go down to the sea, and [‖] all that is therein; the isles, and the inhabitants thereof.

11 Let the wilderness and the cities thereof [*] lift up their voice, the villages that Kedar [†] doth inhabit: let the inhabitants of the rock sing; let them shout from the top of the mountains.

12 Let them give glory unto the LORD, and declare his praise in the islands.

13 ¶ The LORD shall go forth as a mighty man, he shall stir up jealousy [*] like a man of war: he shall cry, yea, roar; he shall [†] prevail against his enemies.

14 I have long time holden my peace; I have been still, and refrained myself: now will I cry like a travailing woman; I will destroy and [‡] devour at once.[§]

15 I will make waste mountains and hills, and dry up all their herbs; and I will make the rivers islands, and I will dry up the pools.

16 [d] And I will bring the blind by a way that they knew not; I will lead them in paths that they have not known: I will make darkness light before them, and crooked things [‖] straight. These things will I do unto them, and not forsake them.

17 They shall be [*] turned back, they shall be greatly ashamed, that trust in graven images, that say to the molten images, Ye are our gods.

18 ¶ Hear, [†] ye deaf; and look, ye blind, that ye may see.

19 Who is blind, but my servant? [*] or deaf, as my messenger that I sent? who is blind as he that is perfect,[†] and blind as the LORD's servant?

20 [§] Seeing many things, but thou observest not; [‡] opening the ears,[§] but he heareth not.

21 [h] The LORD is well pleased for his righteousness' sake; he will magnify the law, and make [‖] it honourable.[*]

22 But this is a people robbed and spoiled; [†] they are all of them snared in holes, and they are hid in prison-houses: they are for a prey, and none delivereth: for [‡] a spoil, and none saith, Restore.

23 Who among you will give ear to this? who will hearken, and hear [§] for the time to come?

24 Who gave Jacob for a spoil, and Israel to the robbers? did not the LORD, he against

CHAP. XLII.—Ver. 1—4. With wonder and love contemplate and believe on Jesus Christ, my eternal Son, whom I have appointed my Servant, as Mediator for the salvation of sinful men; whom I will assist in his work, and furnish with all gifts and graces without measure, that, in consequence of his finishing the undertaking, he may effectually spread the gospel tidings of his redemption among the Gentiles, and render them his peculiar people. Not with carnal contention or pompous ostentation, but in a meek, humble, and peaceful manner, shall he make his personal appearance, and erect his kingdom on earth. He shall not discourage the brokenhearted, nor cast off such as have but very weak grace, but shall encourage, strengthen, and deal kindly with them: and while he renders his word effectual, he shall judge every person uprightly and impartially. No difficulty shall in the least discourage him, nor hinder his finishing his purchase, or his spreading the gospel of men's salvation, erecting his spiritual kingdom among them, and subduing the opposers thereof. And all nations, particularly those along the coast of the Mediterranean and in the islands, shall readily embrace his truths, and become his obedient subjects.——5—9. I, the eternal JEHOVAH and almighty Creator, have called him to his work, for the manifestation of my righteousness and faithfulness, and will conduct, assist, and preserve him in it. I set him forth as the Mediator, Surety, and Administrator, of the covenant of grace to men, that he may endue with saving knowledge, and may conduct to everlasting happiness, poor ignorant sinners of mankind, and deliver them from their spiritual thraldom to Satan and their lusts.—As I am being itself, and do give being to every creature, and fulfil every promise, I will, by him, through the gospel, abolish idolatry out of the world. I have already fulfilled multitudes of my promises, and now give you new promises of release from Babylon, and of redemption from sin, that, when they are accomplished, you may believe that I am the only true God.——13—17. After long forbearing to take vengeance, I will, in the most sudden and furious manner, destroy the Chaldeans and other enemies of my church, and remove every hinderance of my glory and my people's salvation; and will enlighten, renew, and direct them as their need requires. 18—20. Attend ye careless, ignorant, and obstinate sinners: for none are so blind and obstinate as you my professed people, who reckon yourselves the only enlightened and righteous persons. Notwithstanding all my revelations given to you, and the wonderful works which I have wrought for you, ye never duly consider any. Notwithstanding all your pretences to hearken, ye never regard what is said. 21. While I, in the honourable fulfilment of my promises, have continued my favours to you, or will magnify my word in accomplishing my threatenings upon you, Jesus shall, by his finished righteousness, satisfy divine justice, and restore, with advantage, to the holy law whatever honour it had lost by men's sin. 22. For the obstinate disobedience of most of you, ye shall be rendered inexpressibly miserable by the Romans and others, and yet shall be so stupified as never to search out, or repent of the sinful causes of your trouble.

[*] Babylon proud of her walls, the Chaldeans "boasting in their ships;" proud of their naval power and commercial wealth.—Note. Though not a prophecy concerning Britain, how much doth she need this record as a warning. How ready hath she been to boast of her "wooden walls," and the inexhaustible extent of her "national resources!" And may the Lord defend her from her enemies, and increase her riches a thousand fold. But may the Lord preserve her from pride and self-confidence, and trusting in uncertain riches, to the forgetting of the living God!—Ed.

11 I, even I, [n] am the LORD; and besides me there is no saviour.

12 [o] I have declared, and have saved, and I have showed, when there was no strange god among you: therefore ye are my witnesses, saith the LORD, that I am God.

13 Yea, before the day was [‡] I am he; and there is none that can deliver out of my hand: I will work, and who shall [§] let it?

14 ¶ Thus saith the LORD, your Redeemer, the Holy One of Israel, For your sake I have sent to Babylon, and have brought down all their [‖] nobles, and the Chaldeans, whose cry is in the ships. [*]

18 ¶ Remember ye not [q] the former things neither consider the things of old.

19 Behold, I will do a [r] new thing: [†] now it shall spring forth; shall ye not know it? I [s] will even make a way in the wilderness, and rivers in the desert.

20 The beast of the field shall honour me, the dragons and the [‡] [§] owls: because I give waters in the wilderness, and rivers in the desert, to give drink to my people, my chosen.

23 Thou hast not brought me the [‖] small cattle of thy burnt-offerings, neither hast thou honoured me with thy sacrifices: I have not caused thee to serve with an offering, nor wearied thee with incense.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAP. XLII.—Infinite is the excellency of Jesus Christ! How dear to his Father, and useful to men! How glorious the nature and end of his mediation! And with tenderness, fidelity, courage, and success, he executes it. Grand and irreversible is his commission; and his character is answerable to our infinite needs. What ground of gladness is this to sinners, the wildest Arabs and most distant islanders not excepted! And infinitely offensive to JEHOVAH, and ruinous to men, must be the rejection of him. By the most fearful shaking of nations does Jesus often introduce his kindest favours. And with earnestness, power, and grace, he calls and converts sinners to himself. But, alas! how dreadful is it to have the god of this world blinding our minds and hardening our hearts, that the light of the gospel may not shine into them, nor the love of it captivate them to the obedience of faith! And fearful will be the issue, when they, who have the best means of grace, have them least blessed, and profit the least by them.

CHAP. XLIII.—Ver. 1. God formed the Israelites into a church and state, redeemed them from their Egyptian and other enemies, and made them his peculiar people. 2. Whatever great troubles churches or saints endure, they are not hurt nor destroyed by them. 3, 4. God destroyed the Egyptians and others to advance the glory and happiness of the Israelites; and has and will destroy nations for the preservation of his gospel church. 5—7. God gathered the captive Jews from the different places of the Chaldean empire, and brought them to Canaan, as his people; and, in like manner, gathers all elect sinners from all nations to Christ. 8—13. Let either the heathen idols, or their votaries, who are almost as stupid and senseless, produce proofs of their foretelling such events, or else own me to be the only true God.——The several events, which I have foretold concerning you Jews and my Servant the Messiah, and which, by mighty power, I have performed, or will accomplish, are demonstrative evidences that I am the only true God. 14—17. In order to your deliverance from Babylon, I will send the Medes and Persians to destroy the Chaldean empire, and will remove all hinderances of your return. 19—21. Nay, the division of the Red Sea, and drowning of Pharaoh and his army in it, and other things which I have done for you, shall not be comparable to what I will do, in safely conducting you from Babylon, and re-establishing you into a glorious church for myself; and especially in spreading the gospel and the gospel church, and converting multitudes of the most stupid and mischievous sinners to Christ, for the manifestation of my glory. 22—24. But though I never required of you any services that were really burdensome, ye have neglected and been weary of my true worship;

24 Thou hast bought me no sweet cane* with money, neither hast thou filled me with the fat of thy sacrifices: but thou hast made me to serve† with thy sins, thou hast wearied me with thine iniquities.

25 I, even I, am he that blotteth out thy transgressions for mine own sake,‡ and will not remember thy sins.

26 Put me in remembrance; let us plead together: declare thou, that thou mayest be justified.

28 Therefore I have profaned the princes of the sanctuary, and have given Jacob to the curse, and Israel to reproaches.

CHAPTER XLIV.

(1) Promises to Jacob: 1—6. (2) Vanity of idols, and folly of those that make them: 7—20. (3) The grace of God: 21, 22. (4) A song of praise: 23. (5) The works of redemption and providence: 24—28.

YET now hear, [a] O Jacob, my servant; and Israel, whom I have chosen:

2 Thus saith the LORD that made thee, and formed thee from the womb, which will help thee, Fear not, O Jacob, my servant: and thou, Jesurun,* whom I have chosen.

3 For I will pour water upon him that is thirsty, and floods upon the dry ground; I will pour my Spirit upon thy seed, and my blessing upon thine offspring:

4 And they shall spring up as among the grass,† as willows by the water-courses.

5 One shall say, I am the LORD's; and another shall call himself by the name of Jacob; and another shall subscribe with his hand unto the LORD, and surname himself by the name of Israel.

6 Thus saith the LORD the King of Israel, and his Redeemer the LORD of hosts, I am the first, and I am the last; and besides me there is no God.

7 And who, as I, shall call, and shall declare it, and set it in order for me, since [b] I appointed the ancient people?‡ and the things that are coming, and shall come, let them show unto them.

‡ Every sinner hates God (Rom. 8. 7.), and is, therefore, as such, hateful to him, Ps. 5. 5. It follows that the salvation of a sinner cannot originate from any quality in the sinner himself; but in the mercy, compassion, love, and undeserved grace of God. John 3. Ro Rom. 5. 8, 10. Eph. 2. 1.—ED.

‡ The history of nations, rightly read, is the history of divine providence—the development of the government and character of God. Therefore an "ancient people" becomes to the pious and contemplative mind more interesting than a modern people, not merely as deeper studies of curiosity, but as clearer, because more varied illustrations either of divine mercy or judgment.—ED.

‡ If the workman who forms the idol become faint by the toil of making it, and must borrow strength from water, how weak must be the dead idol that cannot do what water can! The Rev. J. Williams states, that when the South Sea Islanders were engaged in making an idol, they strictly abstained from food and water, though the work sometimes continued three days. It is not improbable that a similar practice may have prevailed amongst the Jews during the period of their idolatry; and, if so, it well explains the difficulty in this passage.—ED.

§ The introduction of both the smith and carpenter presents, what is still common amongst heathens, a wooden idol covered with metallic plates. * A man prostrate before an idol, and praying to it for aid and deliverance, is a melancholy evidence of human degradation. No doubt idolaters generally deny that they pray to the idol; but affirm that they use it as "an aid to devotion," and pray to the god it represents. But God rejects all such subterfuges, and detests the idol, as he condemns the idolater.—ED.

8 Fear ye not, neither be afraid; have not I told thee from that time, and have declared it? ye are even [c] my witnesses. Is there a God besides me? yea, there is no [d] God; I know not any.

9 ¶ * They that make a graven image are all of them vanity; and their [f] delectable things shall not profit; and they are their own witnesses;* they see not, nor know, that they may be ashamed.

10 Who hath formed a god, or molten a graven image that is profitable for nothing?
